SHIBE PARK, Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 11.—Boston's last clash with the Athletics of this city came about this afternoon in the shape of a double-header which began early so as to permit of no trouble on account of darkness. Three games had been scheduled but owing to yesterday's rain one game has gone to the list of those that will nert be played. John I. Taylor, owner of the Boston club, volunteered to play all three games today; one in the morning, but Connie Mack refused to take advantage of the generous offer saying that such a course, if the Athletics proved successful might be wrongly construed by the other clubs and would moreover cause a bad pregdent.

Special interest was hown in this last series owing to Mr. Taylor's declaration to the effet that although Boston might be distanced in this year's race the team would do its best to down both the Tigers and Athletics.

Cicotte and Wood for Boston and Krause and Plank for Philadelphia wer the pitchers selected, announced by Managers Lake and Mack for the afternoon with Smith for Boston and Coombs for Philadelphia on the reserve in case of accident.

SON IS SICK, STORROW OFF FOR GERMANY

The friends of James J. Storrow, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, were greatly disappointed to-day on learning that he would be unable to preside at the big banquet to President Taft in Mechanics Hall, Tuesday night, owing to the illness of his seventeen-year-old son James J. Storrow, who is in Bremen, Germany, with a slight attack of typhoid fever.

Mr. Storrow is now en route for Germany to see his son. He sailed on the Lusitania from New York on Wednesday. Daily cables have been received from the sick bed, which state that the boy is steadily improving. He was taken sick one week ago to-day.

Because of Mr. Storrow's departure Bernard J. Rothwell, first vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, will preside at the Taft banquet.

REBEL MOORS BEG FOR PEACE

MADRID, Sept. 11.—The Moors have sued for peace as the result of the landing of 11,000 reinforcements of Spanish troops under General Sotomayer at Melilla and other points along the Morocco coast. Spain will not grant peace, and the campaign planned by General Marina will go forward until the Kabyle tribesmen are completely subdued. Hostilities continue at various points.

COURT SUSTAINS HEINZE DEMURRER

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Judge Hough in the United States Circuit Court to-day handed down an order sustaining the demurrer on behalf of F. Augustus Heinze, charging him with conspiracy. This does away with the charge of conspiracy made against Heinze for the mutilation and the disappearance of books of the United Copper Company. Judge Hough also dismissed fifteen of sixteen counts found by the Grand Jury against F. Augustus Heinze for misapplication of funds of the Mercantile Bank.

Rudolph Francke, Who Accuses Lieut. Peary

CALLS RIVAL 'GOLD BRICK'

Explorer Declares Dr. Cook Has Not Been to Pole, and He Has Proofs—Flat Challenge of Brooklyn Man's Feat in Wireless Message To-day.

BATTLE HARBOR, Labrador (via Marconi Wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.), Sept. 10.—The Roosevelt will remain here three or four days coaling and overhauling ship. I expect to arrive at Sydney about Sept. 15.

Do not trouble about Cook's story or attempt to explain any discrepancies in his statements. The affair wili settle itself.

He has not been at the Pole, on April 21, 1908, or at any other time. He has simply handed the public a gold brick.

These statements are made advisedly, and I have proof of them. When he makes a full statement of his journey, over his signature, to some geographical society or other reputable body, if that statement contains the claim that he has reached the Pole, I shall be in a position to furnish material that may prove distinctly interesting reading for the public.

(Signed) ROBERT E. PEARY.

Wireless from Peary Discredits Cook

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—The following telegram was received by the American News Service to-day from Commander Robert E. Peary:

BATTLE BARBOR (via Marconi wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.), Sept. 11.—To the American News Service, New York:

I DO NOT CREDIT COOK'S ALLEGED DISCOVERY OF THE NORTH POLE.

(Signed) PEARY.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Commander Peary's first official notification to the Navy Department direct of his return and of his discovery of the North Pole came to the department to-day in the following dispatch:

BATTLE HARBOR (via wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.), Sept. 11.—Respectfully report my return. Hoisted navy ensign on North Pole April 6.
PEARY.

The following reply was at once sent to Commander Peary:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 11.—Civil Engineer Peary, Battle Harbor, via Cape Ray, N. F.: Your telegraphic report received. Navy Department extends hearty congratulations upon your successful attempt to reach North Pole. (Signed) WINTHROP, Acting Secy.

Took Pole for America

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Under date of September 10, the Secretary of State to-day received the following telegram from Commander Peary:

BATTLE HARBOR, Labrador (via wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.)—To the Honorable the Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.: Respectfully report hoisted Stars and Stripes on North Pole and formally took possession that entire region and adjacent for and in name of President and United States of North America. Record and United States flag left in possession.

(Signed) PEARY.

COOK OFF FOR HOME; GETS GREAT SEND-OFF

CHRISTIANSAND, Sept. 11.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American Arctic explorer, was given an enthusiastic reception by the city authorities and the public when he arrived here to-day. The water front was thronged with people, who cheered vociferously as the man who first reached the North Pole walked down the gangplank of the steamer Melchoir, from which he had come from Copenhagen, accompanied by an official delegation appointed by the city as a committee to welcome him.

Dr. Cook was plainly pleased with the warmth of his welcome, and to the reception committee expressed his appreciation of the kindly hospitality and [illegible] him and his claim to the discovery of the Pole. As the crowds on the piers cheered him and crowded about as he walked to the vehicle which was in waiting to convey him to a hotel, he smiled happily, waved his hands to them, and repeatedly doffed his hat.

Dr. Cook sailed from here to-day at 12:30 o'clock on the Oscar II. for New York, which is scheduled to arrive on September 20.

PEARY SAILS FOR SYDNEY TO-NIGHT

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 11.—The steamer Roosevelt, with Commander Peary and his successful expedition on board, will leave Battle Harbor, Labrador, to-night for Sydney. The Roosevelt was still at Battle Harbor to-day. The coaling was completed and the final repairs made to the machinery.

2,000 DRUGGISTS TO MEET IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—Two thousand druggists from all parts of the United States will be in attendance at the seventh annual convention of the United Drug Company which will be held in Chicago September 14, 15 and 16. The program includes a trip to Fort Sheridan, automobile tour and theatre party. The delegates will represent a business of over $100,000,000 a year.

FELL 25 FEET; IS IN HOSPITAL

William F. Lardey, thirty-three years old, married and living at No. 15 Walker street, Medford, while at work on the elevated terminal station at Forest Hills square fell twenty-five feet to the ground.

He received a fracture of the left wrist, dislocation of a rib on the left side and contusions of the hip and forehead. He was taken to the City Hospital.

COOK'S RECORDS IN WHITNEY'S HANDS

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 11.—Before sailing Dr. Cook issued a public statement thanking the citizens for their hearty reception and the treatment accorded him while a visitor. He said:

"You were the first to open my eyes to the joys of civilization. I go home with the cheers of enthusiasm, which I shall ever hear.

"As I am about to leave Copenhagen, the first place in the civilized world upon which I set my foot on my return from the pole, I desire to express to the Danish people my very high appreciation of the kindness shown to me on all sides. I thank you, one and all, for your good feeling."

On the eve of his departure from Copenhagen Dr. Cook gave an interview in which he reasserted that his original records had been sent to America. He admitted that some explanation of his parting with them was necessary. Moreover he recorganised now, he said, that if he had been able to submit them to comptent persons every doubt would have been dispelled.

The facts were that when he was returning to Annatok he met Mr. Whitney, who was waiting on his yacht. Being himself restless with the great news he had to tell, he preferred to go to the nearest point where a steamer for Europe could be secured. Aware of the risks of the journey to Upernavik, he copied the original records and handed over the latter, with his sextant and chronometers to Mr. Whitney.

"They are in safe hands," concluded Dr. Cook, "and if anybody says they are on board a whaler or on the Roosevelt and that Peary has seen them the sayer is misinformed."

The Copenhagen correspondent of the London Telegram quotes Dr. Cook as saying before he embarked:

"I have just received a cable from Mr. Whitney aboard the Peannie. He has my documents."

SOUTH END GROUNDS, Sept. 11.—Old Sol started on his job soon enough this morning to get the grounds into fair playing condition for the double-header between the Doves and Phillies and a good crowd turned out to see the last appearance this season of Billy Murray's crowd of disappointers.

When the teams began at 1:30 to practice for the first game which was started at 2 o'clock the grounds were rather slow, but they grew faster ever minute and were plenty fast enough for the ball which was played.

Both Manager Frank Smith of the Doves and Manager Murray were anxious to win the games. Murray was anxious to land his high priced aggregation into the first division in order to satisfy the knockers at home, while Manager Smith wants to get his team out of the cellar position and he needed every possible game to accomplish his purpose.

CUT BY GLASS IN CAR CRASH

One man was hurt in a collision to-day between a city-bound South Boston car and a brewery wagon on East Eighth, near Loring street, South Boston. The car was going down grade at fair speed, and the front vestibule was smashed in.

There was some excitement among the passengers on the car. Most of the windows on the car were broken. One passenger was hit by flying glass and badly cut.

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—in the homes, clubs, restaurants, hotels, cars and boats.

SERIOUSLY HURT IN CRASH WITH CAR

Within sight of his own home Edward Anderson of No. 9 Reed street, Woburn, was knocked from his wagon and seriously injured in a collision with a Woburn and Lexington electric car. The accident occurred at the junction of Reed and Pleasant streets. Anderson was taken to the Choate Memorial Hospital. He had numerous cuts about the head and body and internal injuries. He will recover. Anderson is employed by the company whose car struck him and was riding on one of the company's wagons.

REVERE GAMES ARE PUT OFF

The Electric Light track and field meet scheduled for the Revere Cycle track tonight has been postponed until next Wednesday night. Yesterday's rain left the cinder track and jumping pits in such a condition that Manager Hugh C. McGrath, decided to postpone the meet. The fact that it will be held during carnival weew promises a larger number of entries than would have been to-night and the sport will be more interesting.

POET SINGS PRAISE OF "PAT" O'CONNOR

The charm of verse is being utilized in behalf of Senator Patrick Henry O'Connor of South Boston who is pitted against Councilman O'Bryan for reelection. Cards bearing the following effusion have been showered throughout the district:

Pat O'Connor is fighting,
It's back to the Senate for Pat,
Mr. McNary and his few friends
Can't hand us a lemon, we know where we're at,
And although O'Bryan is running,
There's nothing for him but to learn
That it's one, two, three cheers for Pat
And his Second Term.

To get the right swing of the verse, it is necessary to understand that the words are to be sung to the tune of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." Anna J. Connolly is the author.

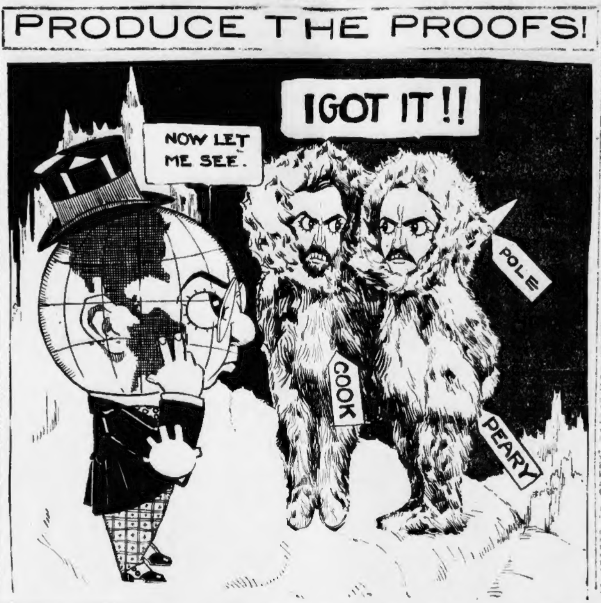
PEARY'S STORY OF THE POLE CONFIRMS DR. COOK'S



PRODUCE THE PROOFS!
NOW LET ME SEE.
I GOT IT!!
POLE
COOK
PEARY

Many Striking Similarities in Their Account of the Conditions Found in the Cheerless Ice Fields at Top of the World.

Further dispatches from Commander Peary to-day give details of his successful dash to the Pole and his perilous return to civilization.

In a wireless message to-day he says:

"Perhaps it is some influence of New England granite mountain and rockbound coast that has given me the staying power to find the great place."

Peary's continuation of his story to-day adds emphasis to what the AMERICAN pointed out yesterday, that there was a great similarity in experiences of Cook and Peary, and that whereas Cook was attended on the final dash by only two Eskimos, Peary also was unaccompanied by any white man, his companion being only his negro cook and four Eskimos.

The great similarity of the two explorers' experiences is illustrated in the following paragraphs taken from the printed reports:

PEARY SAYS—"The horizon was black, and the ice beneath was a ghastly, chalky white."

COOK SAYS—"An endless field of purple snows, a world of ice."

PEARY SAYS—"Coldest temperature at Pole 33 below zero."

COOK SAYS—"Coldest temperature at Pole 38 below zero."

PEARY SAYS—"Coldest temperature on trip 59 below."

COOK SAYS—"Coldest temperature I found 85 below."

PEARY SAYS—"No land."

COOK SAYS—"No land."

PEARY SAYS—"We made rapid progress on the last few miles to the Pole."

COOK SAYS—"The going was easy during the last sixty miles."

How the two men were impressed when, at last triumphant, they reached the Pole, is thus recorded:

WHAT PEARY SAW AT THE POLE:

"The Pole at last! The prize of three centuries, my dream and goal for twenty years; mine at last. I cannot bring myself to realize it!

WHAT COOK SAW AT THE POLE:

"A sense of intense loneliness came with the further scrutiny of the horizon.

"What a cheerless spot to have aroused the ambition of man for so many ages!

"An endless field of purple snows. No life. No land. No spot to relieve the monotony of frost. We were the only pulsating creatures in the dead world of ice.

In the discussion of the claims of Peary and Cook it is generally agreed that the evidence of the Eskimos, who are uneducated and know nothing about scientific instruments, will be of little value. Peary's negro cook Henson cannot be expected to add much light on the North Pole situation so far as furnishing real evidence is concerned. He knows nothing about science.

The presentation of the evidence before the United States Geodetic Survey by the two men has brought forth a discussion that seems to be useless. Peary is a United States officer and will necessarily present his proofs to that body. Cook is not required to present his facts to that body unless he volunteers to do so. But Cook has already declared that he will present his evidence to all the geographical societies in the world.

As a matter of fact neither Cook nor his friends claim for him that he has made any great and detailed scientific discoveries outside of the fact that he reached the Pole and that he reached it before any other man in the world.

The controversy resolves itself into the question of priority of the discovery. On that point Cook declares that he has almost a year the advantage of Peary.

The similarity of the two men's stories as to the conditions at the North Pole has added confirmation to Cook's story. Cook was not able to measure the depth of the water at the Pole because he had no instruments with which to do it. Peary tried to measure the depth of the water, but failed to find the bottom and his line broke. So that neither of the explorers were able to say how deep the ocean is at the Pole.

But at that Peary knows it to be deeper than 1,500 fathoms, the total length of his line which was lowered without touching bottom.

Cook's Story Highly Dramatic.

Peary's story contains many more interesting facts, though as a reliable narrative it is not near so dramatic and graphic as is Dr. Cook's story. The Brooklyn physician appears to be a much more emotional man than the scientific engineer of the navy, as is instanced in their descriptions and in their respective utterances when they first stood at the top of the world.

That neither man should have found the temperature at the Pole to be lower than thirty-eight below zero is remarkable when it is remembered that 107 degrees below zero has been officially recorded in certain sections of Siberia, while in Medicine Hat, British America, where most of our blizzards come from, a temperature of 40 and 50 degrees below zero is common.

The comparative mildness of the Polar climate seems all the more surprising when, in view of the recorded temperatures in the Black Hill region of our own Montana, Peary says that the coldest weather he noted was eighty-three degrees below zero.

The dogs with which Peary traveled seem to have served some of the purposes of the barometer, for their actions gave notice of a rise in temperature. They yelped and cavorted about, says Peary's story, and appeared in the happiest of moods one day when a rise of fifteen degrees was in the air. This rise caused a reduction of friction of the sledges, and made travel easier for the dogs.

Those dogs, the pick of the pack, by the way, according to Lieut. Peary's narrative, were made full partners in the jubilee which followed the actual discovery of the Pole. As a reward they were served with a double portion of pemmican, the equivalent of about two pounds of beef in its power of nutrition, and with this extra food to supply steam the return trip was begun.

Begins Dash on April Fool's Day.

An interesting sidelight on Peary's dash for the Pole is the fact that he set out for the goal on April Fool's day, the most serious bit of business he ever undertook, while one-half of the world was exercising its brain in nonsense.

If Lieutenant Peary himself was overwhelmed with joy as he stood at the Pole, his Eskimo companions were simply delirious with joy, he says. They capered over the ice, crazy with delight, singing and jumping and clapping their hands until ready to drop from fatigue. The quickness and ease of the return trip so impressed the simple-minded Eskimos that one of them explained it by saying that the evil spirit who dominates the North was either asleep or too occupied in a fight with his wife to make trouble for the voyagers.

When the party had again returned to Cape Columbia, every one was exhausted to a point approaching insensibility. The dogs were fed four pounds of pemmican each, an enormous meal, to keep them quiet, and all hands turned in for sleep. They slept for twenty-four hours on a stretch before resuming the march back to the Roosevelt.

The intense silence at the pole impressed both of the explorers. The ice appeared slightly different in color to the two men, Cook speaking of it as purple, while Peary found it chalky white. This is not regarded as a confliction of facts, as the colors might have appeared to various persons different. There are striking similarities, however, in the descriptions of the ice conditions. Both men use the same terms in describing "old ice" and "young ice."

The condition of the ice for fast traveling is described by both men in about the same terms. Peary made on some days as high as thirty-five miles, while Cook made between twenty-seven and twenty-eight miles. When Cook first announced that he had been able to skim over the ice at this fast rate he was denounced by friends of Peary as telling an improbable story. Peary himself comes to the front on this point and corroborates Cook.

Royal Rewards for the Eskimos.

Lieutenant Peary's detailed story of the trip bestows unstinted praise upon his companions. Captain Bartlett, Borup, the Yale runner; Professor McMillan of Worcester, Chief Engineer Wardwell and Henson, the negro, who accompanied Peary to the coveted spot, all come in for words of highest commendation for the aid they rendered in their respective lines.

All the Eskimos on the expedition have been left well provided for, says Lieutenant Peary. One young fellow in particular, who had never been engaged in so adventurous a work, won for his loyalty as one of the four who got to the Pole, a shotgun, rifle, boat, knives and ammunition, regal gifts to him for it would enable him to coax consent from the stubborn parent of his sweetheart who was holding out against a wedding.

All the others whom Peary has just left at home are the happy possessors, he says, of ample supplies for the coming Winter, as a reward for their loyalty.

And now with Peary at Indian Harbor about to start back to home and family, Dr. Cook is also on the seas bound for the United States.

He left Copenhagen yesterday, and sailed from Christiansand to-day on the steamship Oscar II., which was waiting to bring him to American shores.

Managing Director Cold of the Scandinavian-American Steamship Company, who is a former Governor of the Danish West Indies, accompanied Dr. Cook. He said that the Oscar II. could reach New York Monday, September 20, but that he thought it better to keep her to her scheduled time and arrive Tuesday, the 21st.

Dr. Cook's departure from Copenhagen was quite in line with the hospitable treatment he has received since landing there a week ago. Before the gangplank of the Melchior, on which he started for Christiansand, was drawn up there was a pleasant ceremony in the cabin of the yacht, which was attended by Maurice F. Egan, the American Minister to Denmark, and Miss Egan, the rector of the University of Copenhagen and a number of geographers. Admiral Dekichelen, in a speech, thanked Dr. Cook for returning to the United States under the Danish flag.

"Green-eyed envy and jealousy," the admiral said, "are doing their envenomed work, but we in Denmark believe in you absolutely."

Speaking privately, just before sailing, Dr. Cook said:

"I am perfectly willing to put my records before the American coast and geodetic survey to be compared with those of Commander Peary, but I do not see why I should ask for such a comparison first."

Asked if he had any message for the public, Dr. Cook replied: "Don't you think that would be rather presumptuous? All I want is to get home to my wife and children, and to finish my work."

SCIENTISTS GIVING COOK FULL CREDIT

LONDON, Sept. 11.—Scientists declared to-day that Dr. Cook's story of his dash to the North Pole and back is corroborated by the installment of Commander Peary's account as published here to-day in the Times.

A striking similarity in the description of the Arctic ice fields beyond the 88th parallel of latitude and within the very shadow of the Pole in the narratives of the two explorers—a vividly similar description of the smooth, glacial surfaces and the rapid time these conditions enabled both men to make—went far to shatter the skepticism concerning Cook's exploit.

So identical do certain other details bear out the statements of Dr. Cook that to-day scientists and geographers who had held aloof from the controversy declared their faith in the physician-explorer's story while, of course, crediting Commander Peary's story and using it as a basis of comparison. In the matter of temperature the biggest discrepancy exists. Peary speaks of the temperature ranging from 33 degrees to 12 on April 7, the day he left the Pole. Cook's figures ranged fully 50 degrees lower.

After leaving the 88th parallel, Peary set out alone in his dog sledge, leaving the other members of the party to break camp and follow him. Among the party was one keen young Eskimo, who had been promised a rifle, ammunition and a boat if he would complete the journey to the Northern goal with Peary.

Peary Bears Out Cook.

So eager was this young chap for the daring dash that it led to a question of his enthusiasm until it was found that he was in love with an Eskimo girl, but was too poor to marry her until he became an Eskimo plutocrat, which merely consists in owning a gun and a boat.

Peary's description of the ice fields beyond the 88th parallel bears out Cook's description. The surface was smooth and as level as a glacial fringe, broken only occasionally with ridges and with very little open water. The dogs were able to proceed at a gallop and in one run of ten hours immediately after passing the 88th parallel Peary made twenty miles. At the 89th parallel the temperature was 40 degrees below zero. Passing the 89th Peary made twenty-five miles in a single dash in a bitter wind so cold that the flesh cracked and even the Eskimos complained.

Beyond the 89th, the sky was more sombre, the horizon smoky and gray, the desolation indescribable, not a living thing in sight, and the solitude broken only by the groaning of the greenish ice floes over which the sledges sped. Cook had called it a desolate spot, the solitude unbroken, and the silence and loneliness oppressive.

As Peary proceeded the going grew better and faster time was made—another important feature completely vindicating Dr. Cook, and apparently bearing out his narrative completely. In twelve hours the Peary party was able to make forty miles.

There was not a single stretch of open water to hinder the march. The goal was almost in sight. Commander Peary took observations at frequent intervals, until he had established his feat. The commander had realized the ambition of his life.

Starts Race Back.

He was at the North Pole. A detour of some eighteen miles was made about the Pole, observations being taken almost continually to establish not only proof of the discovery, but for scientific values subsequently.

On the afternoon of April 7 a sounding was made five miles from the North Pole. The plummet dropped 9,000 feet into the sea and still did not touch bottom.

Then started the race home. A gale sprang up with biting winds and blinding snow. Luck favored Peary just as good fortune had favored Cook the year before.

When Peary arrived at the Roosevelt filled with joy at the great feat he had just consummated, his rejoicing was turned to sorrow by learning of the death of Professor Ross C. Marvin.

The Daily Chronicle is sending a correspondent to New York to watch the Peary-Cook controversy.

FRENCH EDITOR SAYS PEARY STORY IS UNTRUSTWORTHY

PARIS, Sept. 11.—The Matin published a special edition containing the first installment of Mr. Peary's story. The issue has been selling by thousands all day and in every part of the city.

Every man, woman and child in Paris knows what the hero telegraphed about the greatest work of modern days. The other papers comment reservedly. The Temps makes a savage attack on Peary's veracity, declaring his narrative equally untrustworthy with Cook's. La Liberte accepts the narrative as conclusive.

In commenting on the story the Temps says that Commander Peary's reflections upon Dr. Cook are ungenerous. The Temps expresses the opinion that the first part of Peary's recital is really favorable to Dr. Cook.

It says that Peary's story is obscure, and even inconsistent, pointing out particularly that whereas his diary up to March 15 is scrupulously precise, thereafter it shows a hiatus and the dates are obscure and confusing. For instance, when the story stops Captain Bartlett had been sent back.

"The expedition was then in 87:48, and still far from the Pole," the Temps says. "Peary now proceeds alone, and whatever suspicion was raised against Dr. Cook is equally applicable to him. Peary's recital up to the present time offered nothing more worthy of credence than Cook's."

Nothing succeeds like circulation. The AMERICAN has quantity and quality.

TO DIVIDE WARD 9.

Several hundred members of the Ward 17 Tammany Club, headed by Alderman Curley, will invade Ward 9 to-night to renew their verbal battle against James Donovan and James H. Doyle. The rendezvous will be at the corner of Rowe street and Harrison avenue.

REPORT OF PEARY SPEAKS FOR ITSELF DECLARES BRIDGMAN

By HERBERT L. BRIDGMAN.

SYDNEY, N. S., Sept. 11.—Peary's full report of his dash to the Pole is to be accepted at its face value in every line and statement. Its generous awards of praise to subordinates increase admiration of his leadership. It demonstrates the correctness of Commander Peary's plans in every detail and gives another illustration of the perfection both of his discipline and equipment. It also indicates the correctness of Peary's methods as deduced from actual experience in the field.

It further offers proof of the futility of other routes and certainty of methods. Peary's story appears to dispose of polar attack by balloon, aeroplane, or floating drift of lumber yards and artificially-heated gardens for some time to come.

The development of the scientific side of the work is shown in the detailed current and other observations.

PEARY'S OWN STORY BEARS OUT COOK'S CLAIM, SAYS FIALA

Anthony Fiala, the explorer, has made an interesting comparison for the BOSTON AMERICAN between the summaries of Commander Peary's and Dr. Cook's reports, and he sees much corroboration of the latter in the Commander's data.

In a special dispatch to the AMERICAN from New York to-day Mr. Fiala says:

"Peary says that he found nothing but a flat waste of ice at the pole, and thereby fully substantiates Dr. Cook's claim to have also reached the coveted goal, for Cook also found nothing but a wate of ice. The reports of both men were identical, and as Cook returned first it is without reason to doubt that we must accept tha he visited the pole.

"If Commander Peary had discovered a tract of land or mammoth ice mountains at the Pole then there would have been reason to discredit Dr. Cook, but he did not. He found just what Cook said he himself discovered, a flat waste of ice.

"Day by day Peary's story has gone steadily ahead confirming Cook's statement. First it was doubted that Cook could have made the rapid travel he did. That was regarded the principal evidence against his story. But then came Peary with an even more incredible record of swift travel. Now we have Peary's description of the Pole tallying precisely with that of Cook. What better testimonial could Dr. Cook have?

"While Peary has declared that he will discredit Cook's story, there has been nothing in any of his reports of his voyage to fulfill his promise. His actual experiences merely corroborates Cooks.

"There can be no doubt about it. Peary's accomplishment was a most wonderful one.

"But what of Cook's? Peary was equipped and facilitated with great resources at every turn. Cook was forced to rely upon his own nerve and far less facilities. I am inclined to believe under the circumstances that Cook's achievement was fully as marvelous as that of Peary.

"Cook was stamped as a possible prevaricator because there was no white man with him during his journey—because he had the courage and hardihood to make his dash alone. It was argued that he could not have made his observations alone and that there was no reason to suppose he reached the Pole merely because he said he did.

Peary's own story shows that he sent back his last whiteman when he reached a distance 150 miles of the pole and that he continued on alone except for his Eskimos and Matt Hanson his negro valet.

While Hanson's bravery and faithfulness cannot be doubted it is known that his knowledge as a scientist amounts to little. So if Cook's solitary adventures are not to be accepted at their face value, what are we to say to Peary's story of what he found and where he went?

"One of the most remarkable things about the Peary expedition was that remarkable swiftness with which the return trip was negotiated. This swiftness was permitted by frequent bases along the line of march.

Cook had no supply bases. He had to forage his way back. Had he been equipped with supply caches he would, I think, have been able to have returned a year ago.

"I was one of the first to be skeptical at Cook's report that he encountered a temperature of minus 89 degrees fahrenheit. I had previously heard of 90 degrees but doubted it.

"So I took the trouble to communicate with Willis L. Moore at the Weather Bureau at Washington and he informed me that official records disclose a record of 107 degrees below at a place in Siberia. So there is no ground to think that Dr. Cook was falsifying when he announced his temperature records. It is time enough, however, to thresh the whole thing out when Captain Whitney gets back in October with Dr. Cook's records."

ALARM CLOCK 50c

MODERN METHODS OF TREATING ASTHMA and HAY FEVER

California, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Wyoming and some other States of the Union, or portions of these States, are almost universally believed by sufferers who have not visited them to be "exempt localities" for Asthma and Hay-Fever. This belief is fostered by the unthinking advice of friends, by the recommendations of physicians who do not know whereof they speak, and by the hopelessness of sufferers who "have tried everything else."

Well informed people know that this idea is erroneous. There are sufferers in every State of the Union and in every part of every State, many of whom have gone to their present location in the hope of escaping from the power of their disease. Many of them have exiled themselves from home and friends and some have sacrificed all of their property and their future prospects in seeking by climatic change the relief they must have. A few have succeeded, but it has been a vain hope with the greater portion—they have found either that they have not obtained the relief and cure they were told or believed they would receive, or they have have secured a respite more or less transient from their suffering, and after a brief period of "being better" have found to their horror that the disease was still with them and the vaunted climatic cure was after all a delusion.

What is it that makes one man have Hay-Fever or Asthma and another escape entirely right by his side, exposed to the same pollen, same dust, same influences?

The dust is not the cause; the pollen is not the cause; the nasal growths are not the cause; cold-taking is not the cause.

The disease is in the blood and nervous system; and it is the constitutional predisposition that gives power to the dust or pollen or other exciting influences to awaken the disease and make one man suffer while another goes free.

Under the modern methods of treating Asthma and Hay-Fever, as developed by Dr. Hayes, of Buffalo, and associated physicians during the past thirty years, treatment is addressed to this predisposition, and by changing the constitution eradicates the cause and cures to stay cured, taking out of a man that which makes him different from the man who has no disease, and giving a robust body, strong and healthful.

That these statements are correct is testified to by thousands who know whereof they speak. A few of the grateful words of former sufferers appear from time to time in THE HAYES BULLETIN, which is devoted to the interests of sufferers from Asthma and Hay-Fever.

Any one who wishes to know details of the treatment which is proving successful may write to P. Harold Hayes, Buffalo, N. Y., and ask for Bulletin H 90, which will be sent free of expense.

"SAW PEARY OPEN COOK LETTERS," SWEARS WHITE

Commander's Aide Says "He Acted as if He Owned the North"; "Forced Into Dishonorable Acts," Charges Francke.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—Friends of Dr. Cook will explode a bombshell upon the arrival of Peary and Cook in this city. This will take the form of affidavits sworn to by Joseph White, who was a member of the Peary expedition, and by Rudolph Francke, who accompanied Dr. Cook.

In these affidavits Commander Peary is accused of opening letters entrusted by Dr. Cook to Francke, his own employe, to bring back from the Arctic seas.

These letters disclosed Dr. Cook's plans and progress toward the Pole. When Francke became disabled and left Dr. Cook he started for home, met the Peary expedition on the way back, and spent several days on the Roosevelt.

Francke has sworn that Dr. Cook's letters were not only read but changed by some one on the Roosevelt.

Can Prove Accusations.

Francke, when seen by an American reporter at his home on West Thirty-ninth street, to-day said:

"I have been told not to say one word and I shall try to carry out the wishes of my employers. I have been trying to keep out of the way until Dr. Cook gets back. I have made my affidavit to Bradley and Captain Osbon, and I stick to what I said there.

"I must not talk about any letter I had of Dr. Cook's being opened. I had to do all that I did and I have made a full statement of the case. I can prove what happened, and it will make things lively."

"Did Peary force you to sign a letter?"

"I was forced to do some things, but Bradley is the only one who can tell about them just now. All I can say is that I went with Cook until I was sick and he sent me back with some things. Then I managed to get back aboard the Peary supply ship. Cook was always on the level and if he says he reached the Pole every one can be sure he did.

"Why, Peary told me that some of Dr. Cook's letters could not have been—but I must not start talking. I just will not say another word. My affidavits are all right."

Dr. Cook's Letter Opened.

Joseph White is now running an elevator in a large building in Twenty-first street. When asked about his acquaintance with Francke, he said:

"It's going to make a big row. I have promised not to tell what happened, but I was there when Dr. Cook's letter was opened by Peary and I know some things besides.

"Why, Peary just acted as if he owned everything and everybody in the North. He was just mad to think there was any one else trying to do any exploring. I was in his expedition and he tried to keep even his own men from doing anything. He wouldn't let any one take photographs, but I took some without his knowing it. Then he sent me back as assistant steward on the supply ship.

"I met Francke at Etah. He had reached there after being sent back by Dr. Cook, and he had some papers and instruments that had been given him to take care of by Dr. Cook. There were some furs there that belonged to Dr. Cook, and there were several lively times. I would like to talk about the affair, but have given a solemn promise to keep quiet until Dr. Cook gets back.

Knew What They Contained.

"I think I have read that Peary himself admits knowing about Dr. Cook's letters and saying that they could not have been written from where they were dated. He knew what was in the letters, all right."

Dr. Thomas A. Dedrick, who accompanied one of the Peary expeditions, says that he is unable to account for the movements of Harry Whitney.

"I do not impugn the motives of any one," said Dr. Dedrick, "but from either the Cook or Peary standpoint it is incomprehensible to me why Whitney did not return in the Roosevelt. If Whitney has any of the scientific data of Dr. Cook, then certainly Dr. Cook's rival must expect to have his motives questioned if he did not arrange to bring Whitney back on the first homeward-bound vessel.

"If Peary, from his knowledge of the Eskimos, thinks Dr. Cook did not get out of sight of land, then Peary's return to civilization with the charges against Dr. Cook and without bringing an important witness on the vessel with him is again incomprehensible."

"Done Under Duress."

Captain S. B. Osborn, of the Arctic Club, to whom Francke and White made the affadavits, said, to-day:

"Letters written by Dr. Cook were opened and then resealed. Peary sent friends in all parts of the country fox skins secured by Dr. Cook and then forced Francke to sign a letter excusing this conduct. The affidavits will show that this was done under duress.

"I wish I could tell now all that happened to Francke while he had Dr. Cook's letters and property. It would be particularly interesting in view of the mystery that seems to involve the affairs of Harry Whitney from the time Peary learned Whitney had some of Dr. Cook's records."

PEARY'S FAMILY WAITS AT SYDNEY

SYDNEY, N. S., Sept. 11.—"This is my eighth visit to Sydney in connection with my husband's polar expeditions, and I am overjoyed at his success in reaching the Arctic centre," said Mrs. Robert E. Peary, wife of Commander Peary, as she and her two children stepped off the train.

Mrs. Peary has come to Sydney to await the arrival of her husband on the steamer Roosevelt.

Mrs. Peary said that she thought her husband ought now to be satisfied to stay at home and get acquainted with his family. "He used to say," she continued, "that a man should not go to the Arctic region after he was forty years of age, but the discovery of the Pole was the only thing he had not succeeded in, and he would not discontinue his efforts at the age limit he himself set. On May 5 last Commander Peary was fifty-three.

"His stay in Sydney will be very brief. Being an officer of the United States Navy, he must report without delay at Washington, and he likely will go there direct, with the possible exception of one day's rest at his Summer home on Eagle Island, Casco Bay, Me."

Mrs. Peary's animated and happy appearance bore witness to the pride and satisfaction she felt over her husband's triumph. On the several former occasions when Mrs. Peary came to Sydney to meet her husband she was alone.

Commander Peary's married life has been closely identified with his hazardous enterprises, which explains the emotion which prompted him in the hour of the triumph of his life to send the first announcement, "Have made good at last," to Mrs. Peary at their Summer home in Maine. Later the commander wired his wife to come and meet him at Sydney, adding: "Bring the kids." The "kids" are Marie, aged 16, who was born in Greenland, and Robert E., Jr., aged 6. To-morrow is Marie's birthday, and she had hoped until to-day that the arrival of the Roosevelt, with her father on board, would not be delayed beyond that date.

Mrs. Peary expected to find a message from her husband when she reached here, but none was received. In the absence of any word the wife of the explorer concluded that his vessel is delayed for some reason or other and he is not in a position to say when he will make this port.

It is planned to make the welcome to Commander Peary at Sydney an international demonstration, with Canadian and American officials joining in the tribute. Mayor Richardson has invited Hon. D. C. Fraser, crown governor of the province of Nova Scotia, and Premier G. H. Murray to be the guests of the city, and to extend the congratulations of the government to Peary, while Consul Kehl will represent the United States.

The Roosevelt will be rushed from here to New York in order to take part in the Hudson-Fulton celebration. As yet Peary does not know of this honor for his ship.

Mr. Bridgman, Consul Kehl, Mrs. Peary and her two children have been invited by James Ross, of the Dominion Coal Company to be his guests on board his yacht which will go out to meet the ship as soon as she is sighted.

GERMANY IS WITH DR. COOK IN POLAR DISPUTE WITH PEARY

BERLIN, Sept. 11.—Commander Robert E. Peary's story of the discovery of the North Pole has excited the widest interest. Germany, however, had already rather definitely aligned itself on the side of Cook although as far as can be judged, without any more vital reason than that Dr. Cook's parents had the good fortune to be born in the Fatherland and emigrated as children to the United States, where they Americanized their family and name from Koch to Cook.

Count Henckel von Donnersmarck, the Kaiser's Minister at Copenhagen, on behalf of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, the president of the German Geographical Society, has formally invited Dr. Cook to address the society in Berlin.

Dr. Otto Baschin, the curator of the Geographical Institute University in Berlin, makes a comparative tabulation of Dr. Cook's and Commander Peary's speed records and finds Commander Peary's story "confirms" Dr. Cook in that the commander traveled much faster both to and from the Pole than Dr. Cook, and therefore explodes the suspicions leveled against Dr. Cook's account of the alleged impossibility of his rate of progress.

Sea Nearly Two Miles Deep at Pole, According to Soundings by Peary

Here are some of the striking points brought out in the stories of Dr. Cook and Commander Peary:

One of the Eskimos whom Peary took went for the lure of a gun and a boat, which made him a plutocrat among his people and the beau ideal of the girls of the tribe.

On the afternoon of April 7, Commander Peary, then about five miles from the Pole, made a sounding. The plummet dropped 9,000 feet into the sea and did not strike bottom. This shows the ice is nearly two miles deep at the least.

Peary's description of the ice fields bears out Dr. Cook.

The Times' account says that the surface as Peary found it was level as a glacial fringe, with little open water beyond the 88th parallel.

Passing the 89th parallel Peary made twenty-five miles in a single dash in the face of a wind so bitter that the flesh cracked and even the Eskimos complained.

Peary says that beyond the 89th parallel the sky was more sombre, the horizon smoky and gray, desolation indescribable, not a living thing in sight.

Dr. Cook spoke of it as a desolate spot with solitude unbroken, silence and loneliness oppressive.

HOOK LOST OUT VICTIM WON

"I saw Washington cross the——" but that was about as far as the Hough's Neck tenor got, for something obstructed his vision in the shape of a hook and the audience at the Columbia last evening was spared.

The young man came forth with hat and cane and when he got in the middle of the stage he was so rattled that he did not know how to get rid of them.

But all the amateurs were not of his build. Fred Wilson, a singer, had a hard road, but won over the entire house with his song. His voice was as clear as a bell and he won first prize with a big margin over his nearest rival.

Mike Kelly was the other winner, but what Mike did to get the prize he himself is not aware of. Perhaps it was owing to the fact that he outwitted the hook workers after various attempts to get him that put him in good with the crowd.

Of the young women who appeared Sophie Bennett was the big favorite and sang with all the dash of a professional. Miss Bennett has a pleasing presence and sang with skill, making much out of a rather commonplace song. Ethel Darling, a shapely little dancer, was also in strong with the crowd and was rightly the winner of the second prize.

CUTTLEFISH HEADS SUBMARINE FLEET

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 11.—A remarkable demonstration of the efficiency and possibilities of the naval submarines were completed when the first submarine flotilla, composed of the submarine Viper, Cuttlefish, Tarantula and Octopus, with the parent ship Castine, a converted gunboat, returned to this port after two weeks' practice in Narragansett Bay, the first time in the history of the United States navy that such practice has been held. The work was secret, but it was learned that the practice was divided into parts, speed tests and the firing of torpedoes, while entirely submerged and when partially submerged, with only the periscopes showing.

As a result of the trails the Cuttlefish, commanded by Ensign Simeon B. Smith, was awarded the pennant, with the Tarantula second, the Octopus third and the Viper fourth.

KITCHENER PROMOTED.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—Lord Kitchener, who recently succeeded the Duke of Connaught as inspector-general of the Mediterranean forces, has been made a field marshal of the British Army.

MISS ELKINS TO MEET ABRUZZI

PARIS, Sept. 11.—There is a persistent rumor among the members of the American colony that the Duke of Abruzzi and Miss Katherine Elkins are to meet here—perhaps to-day. It is reported that the Duke has started to Paris from Naples and that every effort is being made to keep knowledge of his whereabouts from the public. He has made arrangements to meet Miss Elkins in Paris, because it is the one spot where their meeting is likely to cause no comment or attract to them any unwelcome attention.

Miss Elkins is denying herself to callers at her hotel. Word is brought from her apartment that she will not receive any one. Stephen B. Elkins, Jr., and his mother are in Paris, but neither will comment on the reports that Miss Elkins is to meet her royal wooer here.

Miss Elkins has prolonged her stay abroad while the Duke of the Abruzzi was performing heroic feats of mountain climbing in the Himalayas, and it was known to their friends that their correspondence had not been interrupted, even when the Duke was in the most inaccessible regions.

It is believed by their friends that Miss Elkins agreed to wait in Europe until he should have accomplished the feats of mountain climbing he set out to perform, and that then he hurried back to Europe as fast as possible and is now on his way to Paris to meet her and renew the romance which all their friends now hope will happily end in their wedding.

BARTLETT SAYS PEARY SEIZED COOK'S STORES

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 11.—Captain Moses Bartlett of Brigus, who commanded Dr. Cook's schooner John R. Bradley, which was fitted out at Gloucester, Mass., in 1907, has issued a public statement as follows:

"Dr. Cook is correct in stating that Peary took his provisions after the steamer Erik returned to Brigus last Fall. Three of her crew, who belonged to Brigus, told me that when Peary arrived at Etah that Summer he took possession of all the stores I had left there the previous Fall for Cook, against his return from the North.

"These men say they helped to move the stuff from where I left it. They are now on the Labrador coast.

"This supply consisted of two dory loads of stores, food and kerosene, which our crew piled on the beach, and then placed the dories over bottom side up, piling stones around and above them to make a cache.

"At Annatook, thirty miles north, where Cook landed, I had previously put ashore two years' supplies for Cook and five tons of hard coal. Our vessel, the John R. Bradley, was laden with stores and ten tons of hard coal.

Peary Without Stores.

"When Cook landed we gave him half the coal and the stores, except what we required to bring us home. Cook could not steal Peary's provisions, because Peary had none on any part of the coast, having used up all the provisions left there by previous expeditions in his 1905-06 trip."

Captain Moses Bartlett is believed to be a relative of the Captain Bartlett of the Roosevelt. Richard Pike, chief engineer of the steamer Erik, which served as an auxiliary vessel for Commander Peary last year, by conveying stores and coal to Etah to supplement those on the Roosevelt, said that Peary did not take Cook's provisions, nor were they put on board of Peary's ship.

Took Food by Mistake.

Pike said:

"Peary left two men of the Roosevelt, the boatswain and one of the firemen, with the immense accumulation of supplies he left at Etah when the Roosevelt went North, and the Erik came South. These men apparently in mistake took some of Cook's stores that were also cached there."

Another member of the Erik's crew, who refused to have his name published, said that the stores were taken by an understanding with Francke, Cook's assistant, in part payment for his passage from Etah to the United States.

The stock of ivory, furs, skins and curiosities which Francke and Cook had accumulated were accepted as the equivalent of passage money. The seaman said at that time Cook was regarded as dead, as he had been missing, and his stores and belongings were regarded as legitimately available for this purpose.

Francke, the story goes, was given to understand that in return for these gifts, a relief expedition would be organized as a sort of sideline by the Roosevelt's crew to search for Cook and bring him back should he be found alive.

A New Complication.

The statement made by the member of Peary's auxiliary vessel, the Erik, to the effect that the stores were taken by Peary in exchange for Francke's passage is apparently made at an unfortunate time, both for the member of the Erik himself and for those he is seeking to set straight, inasmuch as there was published a letter to the effect that Peary sent John R. Bradley a bill of $100 for Francke's passage.

LYNN GIRL IS ILL WITH RARE DISEASE

Ethel E. Perkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Perkins of No. 53 Fiske avenue, Lynn, and a pupil in the Lynn High School, has been ill for the past eight weeks with acute anterior eliomyelitis, a disease similar to spotted fever, only the latter disease affects the brain, while the former the lower limbs of the body.

Dr. Mark Shrum, the attending physician to the girl, believes that she will eventually recover the use of her legs, and if she does she will be one of the few victims to recover from this terrible disease.

DR. COOK EXPLAINS TO STEAD HIS ATTITUDE SINCE FINDING POLE

By W. T. STEAD.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—Arriving at London, I find the anti-Cook sentiment strong, chiefly owing to Cook's having acted contrary to established conventional methods. The English are strong conservatives, and there is something almost contrary to nature in discovering the Pole without having first proclaimed to the world the intention of entering for this great prize.

Cook replies to this:

"I prefer to do first and talk afterward. Second, I couldn't proclaim my intention to go to the Pole before leaving America, because the decision was taken only after arriving in the Arctic where conditions were found conducive to success."

But his chief offense in English eyes lies in not following the established rule laid down by the English Royal Geographical Society. According to official routine, before any traveller is allowed to report his discoveries to the society he must produce to some expert representative of the society his original notes, diary or records, and only after this expert has examined them may he read his paper.

Cook's Answers.

Cook didn't do this at Copenhagen, therefore, "Down with Cook."

"I didn't seek to read any paper to any society anywhere. I objected strongly to making any statement beyond my first written report to the press," said Cook.

"What I wanted was to hurry home, collect my materials, submit them complete in my book to be examined by all the scientists in the world.

"But what could I do? Before I set foot on European soil enthusiastic Danish deputations, headed by the Crown Prince, and the president of the Danish Geographical Society, overwhelmed me with congratulations. On landing, without willing it or expecting it, I was lionized almost to death.

"The press of the world administers to me morning, noon and night a thousand questions; sovereigns, ministers, scientific societies and old explorers insist on entertaining me; publishers snow me under with offers of thousands, nay hundreds of thousands of dollars; the Danish Geographical Society votes me the gold medal. Ought I to have refused it because I hadn't any papers in order? The University of Copenhagen confers upon me an honorary degree.

"What could I do under these circumstances, which were none of my making?

Expected No Triumph.

"What would the press of the world have said if I had refused to speak one word, to see any reporter; if I had rejected all royal commands; had rebuked my kind Danish hosts for their too confiding belief in the word of an American citizen, and had refused honors they kindly heaped upon me?

"Surely I could not have played so churlish a part. I repeat, I neither invited nor expected such a triumph. When the Americans proposed a national reception I repeated that I claimed no recognition until my case was proven."

That is the substance of Cook's reply to the English pedants. It is worth while recalling the fact that the same scruples led many English authorities on the same grounds to question whether Stanley ever discovered Livingston. It seemed shocking that an unknown American newspaper man should discover Livingston to make a scoop for an American newspaper. Stanley blazed out in fury, giving the Royal Geographical Society beans.

Story a Boomerang.

History decided Stanley was right.

The story about stealing stores has proven a boomerang, recoiling on those who started it, but Cook persisting in his modest charitable role forbade recriminations.

As I brought the first news of Peary's success, I can testify to the sincerity of his delight at his old chief's success. He refused to believe the foul accusations against him could have really emanated from Peary, and when one specific statement was made about his Eskimos, he immediately took the straightforward promise of offering to pay the cost of an expedition to bring them to New York.

Judging the men solely from their behaviour to each other in this controversy, most men feel they would rather be wrong with Cook than right with Peary.

PROHIBITION TICKET LED BY NICHOLS

"Organized greed" and "unorganized appetite" is the way the Republican and Democratic parties were described, respectively, to-day by Eugene W. Chapin. At the state convention of the Prohibition party held in Faneuil Hall, Professor John A. Nichols, the social reformer of this city, was selected as the party's candidate for Governor. Mr. Chapin, who last year was the party's candidate for President, in addressing the delegates, said:

"We are the only party in the United States that has accomplished anything in the last forty years. The Republican and Democratic parties are not, according to the honest definition of the word, political parties. The Republican party is organized greed and the Democratic party is unorganized appetite. When men in these two whiskey parties get better than their party they join the Prohibitionists."

The convention was called to order by Willard O. Wylie, chairman of the State committee. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. W. Ferris of Boston. Professor Alfred H. Evans of Northampton was chosen permanent chairman and W. D. Moon of Lynn, secretary. J. B. Lewis then addressed the convention on the deceased members.

FISH EXPERT LEAVES GOVERNMENT EMPLOY

RUTLAND, Vt., Sept. 11.—John W. Titcomb, chief of the division of fish culture, Bureau of Fisheries, Washington, D. C., states that he has resigned his position in the government service to accept a more lucrative one with Theodore N. Vail of Lyndonville, president of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company. Mr. Titcomb would not state in what capacity he would be employed by Mr. Vail, but it is thought probable that Mr. Vail has decided to stock the ponds and streams on his 2000-acre ranch and devote considerable attention to fish culture.

HARMON TRIAL PUT OFF TILL ALIENISTS ACT

James M. Harmon will not be put on trial for his life in the East Cambridge court house on Monday, as has been announced. He is charged with the murder in Somerville on December 18 last of Maud H. Hartley, with whom he was in love, and has been indicted for first degree murder.

To-day District Attorney John J. Higgins announced that he had consented to delay the trial until a commission reports as to Harmon's sanity. Chief Justice Aiken of the Superior Court will appoint the alienists the coming week. If the commission finds that Harmon is insane, he will be sent to the Bridgewater Asylum. If the alienists say he is sane, he will be tried for first degree murder. District Attorney Higgins said to-day he would not accept a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree, which would mean life imprisonment.

Harmon is eighteen years old and a son of Police Sergeant James H. Harmon of Somerville. Miss Hartley was seventeen and a pretty girl.

It is expected that the men charged with the murder of Annie Mullins in Arlington on March 27, 1908, will be put on trial about the first of October. The prisoners are Peter Delorey and James Mantle.

HERO OF NINE SAVES CHILDREN

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 11.—Fire destroyed the Summer cottage of Robert A. Walsh at White Bear Lake and three children of a family of thirteen were burned to death. William Walsh, aged nine years, was terribly burned in his heroic efforts to save his little brothers and sisters, six of whom were sleeping in the second story of the cottage. He might have escaped without injury had he not remained to assist the younger children. He was finally compelled to jump from a second-story window.

CHAPEL IS DESTROYED BY INCENDIARY

The chapel of the First Baptist Church in Revere was destroyed by an incendiary fire before dawn to-day. The church is located on Beach street, in the centre, but the chapel was in North Revere, and in a residential section. Rev. Nelson S. Burbank is pastor of both. The loss is estimated at about $2,000 and half of it will fall on the town which had just spent a large sum equipping it as a temporary public school.

A month ago an incendiary destroyed the North Revere schoolhouse and about 8 a. m. fire was started in the porch of the chapel. The structure was ablaze before an alarm sounded and the chapel practically destroyed.

The town at a meeting on Thursday last appropriated $19,500 to build in North Revere a schoolhouse to take the place of the one burned. It will be named after the late Henry A. Waitt of Waitt & Bond, his widow having given the land for a school building.

GIRL TELLS HOW SHE GAVE HER OWN BLOOD TO SAVE SISTER'S LIFE

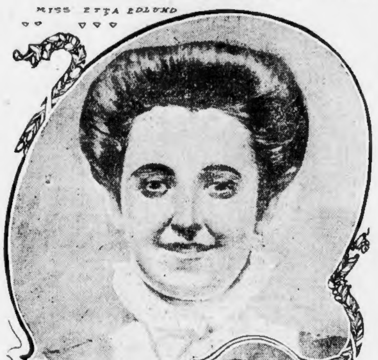

Diagram shows method of connecting arteries in performing delicate operation.

BROCKTON, Sept. 11.—How she cheerfully gave up her own blood because she knew it might save the life of her sister, Mrs. E. Forest Marston, Miss Etta Edlund, a pretty girl of twenty, to-day modestly told her friends, who are praising her for her heroism.

Knowing that she would suffer pain because no anaesthetic can be given in the transfusion of blood, Miss Edlund, who lives at No. 3 Grove street, said she didn't even think of the pain because she loved her sister so much that she would have been willing to have died for her.

"I did only what any loving sister would do," she said. "I was told that it was my sister's one chance for life and so I thought of nothing else but what I could do to save her."

For weeks Mrs. Marston had been hovering between life and death. Wednesday night Miss Edlund went to the Brockton Hospital. She was taken to the operating room and placed beside her sister, their heads being in opposite directions.

Her left wrist and that of her sister were bared. A Boston doctor performing the operation, connected an artery in an arm of each. For nearly an hour, at intervals, Miss Edlund lay motionless beside her sister, her blood flowing through a silver tube into her sister's body. Finally Miss Edlund was carried from the table to a bed and closely watched for the night. Mrs. Marston, whose life had been slowly ebbing away, rallied, and for the first time in several weeks passed a comfortable night.

To a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter Miss Edlund told the following story of her sacrifice:

"I went into the operating room about 10 p. m. There I saw my sister lying on the operating table. Beside her lay another table, and I was told to lie beside her.

"The doctor made an incision in my left wrist and another in that of my sister. I was told to lay perfectly quiet. I scarcely breathed. I could hear nothing but the ticking of the clock and the stealthy tread of the physicians as they passed from my side to that of my sister. A slight movement of my sister's wrist was the only indication I had that she was still alive. At last I was told that I could get up.

"The doctor dressed my wrist, which needed four stitches to close the cut. Except for a little pain now and then, I felt no ill effects from the operation. I certainly do not feel weak, but have been ordered to rest for a few days before returning to work."

Miss Edlund lives with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gustaf Edlund. Mrs. Marston lives with her husband in Benton street.

PORT SURVEYOR GIVES WARNING

Surveyor of the Port J. J. McCarthy caused surprise in the customs service when he sent out a circular letter to the collector of the port, George H. Lyman, Naval Officer J. O. Lyford, Appraiser Winthrop T. Hodges and to all customs inspectors to the effect that the name of any Government official or other person who interferes with an inspector in any way in the examination of the baggage of passengers shall be reported to him. He tells the inspectors that they are held strictly accountable for the thorough examination of all baggage, as all persons must be dealt with alike according to the law.

The communication is one of the most forceful that has been received by the men in the customs service in this port for some years. A story is going the rounds of the service that "some one higher up" has been meddling with affairs in this port.

HOW TO STOP NOISE—The Sunday American will contain an intensely interesting article on the unique "houses of silence" soon to rise in America.

DIPLOMATS HELD UP IN THIEF HUNT

Rich summer residents of the North Shore are alarmed to-day as the result of a series of bold thefts, which culminated in the looting of the home of J. Arthur Brooks and Amory Eliot at Manchester. Over $1,000 in jewelry was taken from both places.

The Manchester police, who are at work on the case, to-day declare that the ringleader of the gang is a woman. It is believed that she planned every break and perfected the arrangements that made escape in each case very easy. To the police she is known as the woman in blue.

The only logical conclusion that can be drawn is that the breaks were made by someone who knew conditions at both houses and had seen the interior of each residence. It is not known, however, whether the breaks were the work of servants, or some woman who had the entree into North Shore society and who was aided and abetted by a man.

The Eliot and Brooks breaks were among the most daring that the thieves have made on the North Shore. In both cases they worked during the dinner hour.

While searching for the thieves who committed the Eliot and Brooks burglaries, the Manchester police held up Secretary J. de Vianna Kelch and Councillor R. de Lima de Silva of the Brazilian delegation.

Both officials were walking home from the Essex Country Club to their cottage on Pine street, Manchester, when they were stopped by Chief of Police William H. O'Sullivan and Officer Sheehan.

The Eliot break was discovered by Mr. Eliot. He was on his way to the third floor of his cottage and while on the second floor stopped to turn on the lights. As he did so he heard a noise in one of the rooms and saw the shadow of a man who was just climbing through a window.

The robber scrambled to the piazza and from there dropped to the ground and made his escape. On investigation it was found that about $1,200 worth of diamonds, pins and other articles of jewelry were missing.

None of the beautiful and costly presents that have been received by Miss Mary Eliot in anticipation of her coming wedding were disturbed by the robber because of Mr. Eliot's timely appearance.

The Brooks cottage was entered while the occupants were at dinner. The robber or robbers broke into the second story of the cottage and carried away jewelry valued at $1,000.

Police Issue Warning.

The police were notified and the woods in the vicinity of Old Neck were searched. Over $10,000 worth of jewelry and valuable articles have been stolen in these second-story robberies during the past weeks from the cottages in this vicinity, and the police are baffled in their attempts to locate the perpetrators.

Chief of Police Sullivan warned all the Summer residents to keep a guard on the second floor of their cottage during the dinner hour.

The cottage of Walter J. Mitchell at Manchester Cove was broken into on Wednesday and jewelry, diamonds and money belonging to Robert Fulton Cutting of New York, who was then living in the cottage, were taken. In much the same manner the cottage of Lucius Tuttle was entered recently. The men are believed by the police to be familiar with the cottages they enter.

The Denegree cottage was also entered, but the burglar was scared away. This break was made by a woman who was dressed in blue.

Din of Airships Music of Future.

BRESCIA, Italy.—When Signor Puccini, the composer, heard the deafening noise of Glenn Curtiss's aeroplane motor, he said: "This is the music of the future."

D'Annunzio, the author, also visited the sheds at the course and told Calderara that he would fly with him. It is decidedly problematical, however, whether he can do so, for one of Calderara's aeroplanes is smashed and the others not yet ready. Later D'Annunzio also visited the shed where Curtiss stores his aeroplane. The Italian author thought it not only the best machine but "the most artistic, poetic and birdlike." Curtiss explained the different parts of the apparatus while D'Annunzio took notes for his forthcoming novel on aviation, the hero of which is to be an aviator.

EMMA SAVOIE, CONVENT PUPIL, WHO IS MISSING

CENTRAL FALLS, R. I., Sept. 11.—Miss Emma Savoie, a fifteen-year-old girl who left here Monday evening for Longueuil, Quebec, where she was to have entered a convent to complete her education, has failed to report at that institution. Her parents and the local police are of the opinion that the girl was enticed away by a young man who met her on the train and stated that he was en route to attend the Sherbrooke fair in Canada.

The girl is an only daughter. The mother is prostrated with grief and believes that the girl is being forcibly detained.

"I know that Emma would not stay away of her own will," she said.

After exhausting every private source to secure information, Joseph Savoie, the father of the missing girl, requested Chief McCarthy to aid in the search.

The chief immediately wired to the Sherbrooke police to try to locate the couple, as he holds strongly to the theory that the traveling companion enticed the girl to accompany him to the fair.

The father of the girl lives at No. 3 Sales street, this city. Monday evening, with his wife, he accompanied the daughter to the Pawtucket depot. At the station a young man whom the father knew greeted the parents and informed them that he was going to Canada.

Mrs. Savoie accompanied her daughter as far as Worcester and returned home happy in the belief that her daughter would have a companion as far as Nashua, as at that point the young man said he would have to change and go to Canada by the way of the White Mountain division of the Boston & Maine.

Relatives of Miss Savoie anxiously waited at the depot in Montreal to escort the girl to the convent. When she did not arrive they made inquiries at the convent and found that she had not reported there. The Montreal police were called upon to locate her, but they failed.

TAFT SALUTES MARCHING VETS OF DAYS OF '61

BEVERLY, Sept. 11.—President Taft this afternoon reviewed the parade of the Essex County G. A. R. from a reviewing stand in front of City Hall. Beside him stood Governor Draper, Secretary of the Treasury McVeagh and Congressmen Butler Ames, Roberts and Gardner.

There were 1,600 veterans in the parade. Captain Alvin A. Hanscom was chief marshal. He is the man who stood on the President's lawn and made a personal appeal to the President to review the old soldiers.

The President was given a great reception by the veterans. The city was a mass of flags and bunting in honor of the President's first visit to the city proper. Last night's rain made the decorations a bit bedraggled in appearance, but the weather failed to dampen the enthusiasm of Mr. Taft's fellow-townsmen. He was cheered many times during the parade, and waved his hand and bowed in recognition.

President Taft was so busy during the morning that for the first week day since he came to Beverly he missed his game of golf. He was at his desk in his home all forenoon attending to details incident to his Western trip.

Secretary of the Treasury McVeagh leaves to-night, and it is expected that he will give out to the public within the next forty-eight hours the names of the men who will constitute the new commission of tariff experts. He has gone over with the President carefully a list of men picked by Mr. Taft himself, and from this list the five or six men who are to decide questions arising under the administration of the new tariff law will be picked.

ONLY TWO MORE DAYS OF REST FOR PRESIDENT

BEVERLY, Sept. 11.—After a conference with the President, Director of Census Durand announced that the supervisor of the census for the whole State of Connecticut will be William B. Bailey, professor of statistics at Yale.

Professor Bailey's commission was signed by the President this afternoon, and his selection is but one more indication of the determination of Mr. Taft and Mr. Durand to select as supervisors only those men who are eminently qualified to do the work. The professor is about forty years old and is a recognized authority on statistical work. He has been employed all Summer by the bureau of the census in mapping out plans for taking the census.

This was the final conference between Mr. Durand and the President regarding the supervisorships. Nearly all of them have been decided on, and those not made public to-day will be announced later by the President.

To-day the President reviews the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic of Essex on the main street of Beverly. This will leave the President only two more whole days of holiday, for on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock he will leave here for Boston, where he will attend the banquet to be given him that evening by the Chamber of Commerce. On Wednesday he will leave Boston on his Western tour.

DANGERS TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

Three Times as many Die in Cities as in the Country. A Word to Mothers.

The strain upon young children during school hours is severe, and parents should have a care that the little ones are strong enough to withstand this strain. Every child should be well nourished and the organs made to work naturally, otherwise permanently injured health will result.

If the child is sickly, run down, as you call it, nine times out of ten it is because of carelessness in protection from the weather. If the child has a cold, be careful of the medicine you use. Above all, be sure that it is pure, that it is not a mere compound of stimulants or dangerous drugs, such as morphine, alcohol, etc., contained in patent medicines.

For a family medicine, a cure for the child's cold, a food for the little body, something that will give vigor and stamina to the system, Father John's Medicine is unequalled. Its merits can be stated in such unqualified terms because it has been tried and tested for half a century, since it was recommended by the late Rev. Fr. John O'Brien of Lowell, Mass., for whom it was prescribed by an eminent specialist.

No better proof of its value for children is necessary than the fact that it has been used in St. Peter's orphan asylum, Lowell, Mass., for years, and is to-day. It would be impossible to find a healthier lot of children than the little ones so well and kindly cared for at this institution.

HARRIMAN, DYING, GOT AID OF MORGAN AFTER TWO-HOUR CONFERENCE

ARDEN, N. Y., Sept. 11.—One of the last men to talk with Edward H. Harriman before the relapse of last Sunday that ended in his death was J. P. Morgan. The great financier came to Arden house Thursday of last week when the encouraging improvement noted in Mr. Harriman's condition was at its height and in spite of his bodily weakness the head of the Union Pacific was as well fitted to discuss business as at any time in his life.

For nearly two hours the two leaders of American finance sat on the porch in the sun. It is believed that at this conference plans were laid to support the financial market in the event of Mr. Harriman's death or in case his health forced him to abandon all business activity.

When this conference occurred Mr. Harriman was already a dying man. Although he kept this information fro mhis family and steadily encouraged their belief that he would get well, it is now believed that he himself knew that he was doomed.

No one saw more clearly than Mr. Harriman what would probably happen when he died. For the sake of thousands of railroad stockholders, as well as for his own interests, he knew that unless the strongest money power in the country "got under" the market the effect of his death would be disastrous. This is why he called in Mr. Morgan.

Fifty detectives will come here from New York to-morrow to guard against disturbance on the part of any of the thousand or more visitors who are expected to witness the simple funeral rites over the body of E. H. Harriman.

All churches throughout the valley will join to-morrow in paying tribute to the memory of the departed magnate. Special prayers will be said, and the choirs of seven churches will sing at the funeral.

St. John's church, where the funeral services will be held, has been draped in mourning. The Harriman pew, directly beneath the pulpit, is banked with ferns and shrouded in mourning draperies.

The services will be conducted by Episcopal Bishop Doane of Albany and Archdeacon Nelson of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. They will be assisted by the Rev. J. Holmes McGuiness, rector of St. John's Church at Arden and spiritual advisor of the Harriman family.

Family Service at 10.

There will be family services at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning at the Arden residence. Communion will be celebrated at St. John's Church at 11 o'clock, followed by a memorial service at which the Rev. Dr. McGuiness will make a funeral address.

The funeral services will be held in St. John's Church at 3 p. m. The choir of Grace Church, New York, will sing. The services will be strictly private and only the closest friends of the family will attend.

Mr. Harriman's will, it was learned today, will probably be filed at the county seat of Orange county early next week. It is said that it sets aside a large portion of the estate here for a public park.

Pact with Morgan.

The cause of Mr. Harriman's death is given in the death certificate signed by Dr. W. A. Lyle as "Heart failure superinduced by internal complications."

The certificate is in the hands of Undertaker J. D. Smith, who will file it with Town Clerk S. R. Pembleton, either tonight or to-morrow morning.

CHURCH MARKS FIFTIETH YEAR

With a mass celebrated by priests, all of whom were once altar boys at the Church of St. Francis de Sales, on Bunker Hill, Charlestown, the observance of the semi-centennial of that church was begun today. The celebration will close with a parade of the Holy Name Society of the parish, numbering 1,700, and the fourth degree Knights of Columbus, on Monday evening.

The officers of to-day's mass were Fr. John S. Keating, S. J., of Baltimore, celebrant; Fr. Michael H. Callahan of Ayer, deacon; Fr. James McGinnis of Brighton, sub-deacon, and Fr. William H. Walsh, the pastor, master of ceremonies. The sermon was preached by Fr. Benjamin Teeling of St. Philip's Church, South End.

To-morrow there will be a pontifical mass in the forenoon, and confirmation in the afternoon.

On Monday there will be a requiem mass for the souls of the parishioners who have died since the establishment of the parish.

STOWAWAY IS FREED CONVICT

Having left the country because of a prison record, Patrick Malloy returned as a stowaway on the steamer Philadelphian, and is held by the immigration authorities for an inquiry into his case, which is without precedent. It is likely that he will have to go back to England. Malloy, who is forty-two years old, is a native of Ireland. He first came here twenty-three years ago, and ten years later was sentenced to prison for breaking and entering. After he had completed his prison sentence he was given a suit of clothes and $10. Fearing that his prison record would keep him out of work, he went to England. There he tramped about, penniless and hungry, and in desperation stole aboard the steamer at Manchester. He told his story without reserve, and did not try to conceal the fact that he had been a convict.

TYPHOID CASES STIR BRIGHTON

Four new cases of typhoid fever have been discovered in the Brighton district, making a total of more than thirty within the past few days.

Although officials of the Health Department are investigating the source of infection for the typhoid cases, they have been unable to discover the cause, but believe that impure milk may be responsible. While the members of the Health Board are adverse to condemning milk dealers and readily say that the supply received daily in this city is unusually clean, some of the department's inspectors are tracing the sources of the milk supply in that part of the city.

While the number of cases in Brighton is exceedingly large, the officials of the Health Board do not characterize the outbreak as an epidemic.

SHERMAN GIVES UMPIRE A CALL

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 11.—Becoming excited over what he believed to be a bad decision at first base in the game between the Kansas City and Minneapolis teams of the American Association, Vice President James S. Sherman called Umpire Clarence Owens to his box after the inning was over and protested against the decision.

"Mr. Owens," the vice president is quoted as saying in a dignified manner, "I believe your decision at first base on that man was incorrect. He was safe, and had he been called safe it might have won the game for the home team. Your umpiring seems to have been good outside of that, but I believe that decision was wrong."

RUSH BODY HERE IN SPECIAL CAR

YORK BEACH, Sept. 11.—John Sturgis, the seven-year old son of J. H. Sturgis, treasurer of the Franklin Savings Bank of Boston, and who resides on Brattle street, Cambridge, was drowned at Simpson's wharf.

The boy was fishing from the wharf when he slipped and fell into the water. He sank at once, and did not appear again at the surface.

Mr. and Mrs. Sturgis arrived here from Boston. The former immediately ordered a special train to take the body of his son to Cambridge.

HE BROUGHT HER UP LIKE A RAILROAD!—Who? Why, Harriman, of course! Read it in the Sunday American.

BAY STATE MAN HEADS SPANISH WAR VETS

TACOMA, Wash., Sept. 11.—The Spanish War Veterans at their national encampment elected Colonel Edward J. Gihon of Wakefield, Mass., commander-in-chief. Napoleon White of Boston was elected leader of the military Order of the Serpent.

After a spirited debate the name of the organization was changed to Spanish War Veterans, instead of the United Spanish War Veterans.

HAVERHILL DOCTOR QUIETLY MARRIED

HAVERHILL, Sept. 11.—Cementing a friendship formed while both were attending school in Boston, Dr. Frederick A. Mackinnon of this city, who has recently passed the Massachusetts Board or Registration in Dentistry, and Miss Mary R. Dwyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Dwyer, the former a wealthy carriage manufacturer of Milford, were secretly married August 20 by Herbert M. Mankas, a justice of the peace, at the latter's home in Dorchester.

GREAT THRONG AT PARISH JUBILEE

Hundreds of former parishioners from all parts of the country are in attendance at the golden jubilee celebration of St. Francis de Sales parish in Charlestown, which opened to-day with solemn high mass for the children. The church was thronged. The streets leading to the edifice are beautifully draped with the national colors. The mass was celebrated by priests who were former altar boys at the church. The Rev. John S. Keating, S. J., the Rev. Michael F. Callahan of Ayer, the Rev. James McGinnis, the Rev. James J. Redican and the Rev. Benjamin F. Teeling of St. Phillips Church, Roxbury, took part in the services.

MISS DAVENPORT, TO MARRY SON OF SENATOR ALDRICH

SOCIETY BUSY AT BERKSHIRE HUNT MEET

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Life in the Berkshires is at its gayest just now, for the hunting season is on in earnest. From early morning until late at night the hills resound with the echo of the hunter's horns, the bay of the hounds and the calls and laughter of the riders whose vari-colored hunting togs add life to the already gay scene.

The season was formally opened with the Annual Hunt ball held in Lenox last night, when the masters of hounds of five country clubs and many daring cross country riders in pink hunting coats, riding breeches and boots, and the beaux and belles of Lenox, Bar Harbor, the North Shore and Newport gathered at the beautiful residence of Spencer P. Shotter of Atlanta, Georgia and danced into the wee sma' hours.

Prominent Bostonians There.

The guests were received by the Hunt ball committee including Mr. and Mrs. Newbold Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Frothingham and Mr. and Mrs. David Turner Dana.

Among the well known Bostonians prominent among the guests were Miss Alice Sohier and her fiance, Herbert Bramwell Shaw, whose wedding is to be an event of the very near future; Colonel and Mrs. William D. Sohier, Barbara Burr, I. Tucker Burr, Dorothy Tuckerman, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey and Miss Rosamond Dixey, Dorothy Jordan, Edith Bird, Charles S. Bird, John Bowditch, Dr. and Mrs. Henry P. Jacques, the Misses Charlotte and Cordelia Barnes and Hayden Channing.

The annual hunt meet takes place today and the rivalry of several ultra fashionables who will takes part is of the keenest.

Five cups have been offered, with an additional $100 in plate in the Lenox Club steeplechase. Frederick Bull has offered a cup for the horse show stakes, while other cups have been offered by Giraud Foster, Joseph Burden and Frank P. Sturgis.

Aldrich-Davenport Engagement.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Davenport of No. 460 Beacon street, and of "The Rocks" at Marblehead, have announced the engagement of their only daughter, Miss Dorothea Davenport, to William Truman Aldrich, third son of United States Senator and Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich of Warwick, R. I.

It is said that the wedding will take place next January, and that the couple will make their future home in New York city. Mr. Aldrich's sister, Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and his two brothers, Edward S. and Richard Aldrich, live there now.

Miss Dorothea Davenport is one of the most charming and spirited members of the younger set. She belongs to the Vincent Club and has appeared in the club theatricals, singing in the choruses and figuring in the dances. She was introduced to society two years ago.

Mr. Aldrich is a graduate of the Ecole de Beaux Arts, Paris. For a year he was associated with Carrere & Hastings, architects, of Providence.

He has been a guest at "The Rocks" in Marblehead of late. The past week he and his fiancee visited the Aldrich estate at Warwick, R. I., and were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Stuart M. Aldrich at an engagement luncheon. Tuesday Mr. Aldrich sails for Paris.

North and South Shore society and many prominent in horse show circles from Boston, Brookline and Cambridge were present yesterday at the horse show on the estate of Henry M. Whitney at North Cohassett. In spite of the unfavorable weather more than 500 were present and the entire program with the exception of the trotting was carried out, and the affair is being continued this afternoon.

Spaulding-Fairlee Wedding.

Next Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock is the time set for the wedding of William Stuart Spaulding of Beacon street and Pride's Crossing to Miss Katrina Fairlee. The wedding will take place at the home of Miss Fairlee at Kenilworth, Illinois, and will be a very quiet affair owing to the fact that Mr. Spaulding is in mourning for his mother, Mrs. Mahlon D. Spaulding, who died at Pride's last season on her return from Europe with her sons. Mr. Spaulding is a member of the Country Club, the Union, Somerset, Automobile, Eastern Yacht, and the Tennis and Racquet clubs. He also belongs to several of the most exclusive New York clubs.

Congressman and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth are again at the North Shore and are the guests of Mrs. Susan Longworth at Beverly Cove. Other guests of Mrs. Longworth at this season are the Vicomte de Chambrun, the military attache of the French Embassy at Washington, and his family, and the B. A. Wallingfords of Pittsburg.

FLAMES MENANCE CROWDED THEATRE

TAUNTON, Sept. 11.—A fire that threatened seriously the Taunton Theatre, where a large audience was witnessing a performance, and Odd Fellows' Hall, where degree work was being performed, practically destroyed the plant of the Globe Manufacturing Company on Court street at a loss estimated at $40,000, partially covered by insurance.

STEVEDORES STRIKE; FIGHT DELAY IN PAY

Because the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad did not pay off its 200 stevedores, employed in unloading the freighter Old Colony at Central Wharf at the regular paytime to-day, the entire force went out on a strike and refuse to return until they are paid. Shortly before 10 o'clock the word was passed along the line that the pay was to be held back until Monday.

Hugh Doherty, the leader in the movement, says that all the men are in hard lines and depend on their salary to carry them from week to week and this will make it impossible in many cases for their large families to get their Sunday dinners.

A force of fifty Poles have been put at work unloading. Thomas Tibbets, a stevedore on the wharf, said that he could not do anything to prevent the strike, as the railroad company has always been in the custom of paying a day later when a holiday occurred on the first day of the week and this caused a delay in the payroll.

6,000 BORDEN MILL WORKERS TO QUIT BIG PLANT MONDAY

FALL RIVER, Sept. 11.—A strike that would effect the 6000 operatives of the Iron Works Mills, controlled by M. C. D. Borden, is threatened on next Monday by the action of the weavers of those mills in unanimously agreeing to quit work Monday unless their request for a 10 per cent. increase in wages was granted.

There has long been unrest among the employes of the Iron Works Mills regarding the wage question.

The Iron Works Mills are not in the Fall River Manufacturers' Association, where the wage question is controlled by the sliding scale system inaugurated a few years ago on the recommendation of Governor William L. Douglas to settle a big strike, but Mr. Borden has followed the scale of the Manufacturers' Association in paying his employes.

INDICT WOMAN CADET SUSPECT

An indictment was returned to-day by the Suffolk County Grand Jury in the "White Slave" case. Laude Depres was indicted for enticing Alma Winchester away from her home in Montreal, and bringing her to Boston.

The girl was told she could obtain a position as a milliner at good wages. She was rescued from a house on Myrtle street, the woman in charge of the house arrested, and indicted to-day.

The Grand Jury came in before Judge Harris in the Superior criminal court to-day and reported a list of sixty-five persons indicted. There were several no-bills reported. Most of the cases are of routine nature. This is the regular September report of the Grand Jury.

Harry Fuchs was indicted on a charge of assault with intent to murder Herman Guekes, July 6, at the corner of Beach and Washington streets, Roslindale. He tried to kill himself, too. About six years ago Guekes accidentally killed a brother of the defendant, and that accident is said to have prompted the recent shooting.

Frederick Hegner, a man [illegible], was indicted, charged with assault with intent to kill an infant. He saw the child in a baby carriage in Revere, and is alleged to have remarked to a companion, "See me shoot the kid." Thereupon he fired, the bullet entering the child's head.

MATCH IN BIRD'S NEST SETS BLAZE

HARTFORD, Ct., Sept. 11.—Faulty electric wires were at first blamed for the $2,000 fire which damaged the residence of Major H. B. Philbrick of No. 111 Edwards street. After a careful investigation Building Inspector Fred Bliss and Electrical Inspector Thomas H. Day have announced that Major Philbrick himself is right in blaming the trouble on birds who built their nests under the eaves of the house in large numbers and must have carried up a match, which in the hot sun became ignited.

SOMERVILLE YOUTH IN ENTICEMENT CASE

In Somerville Court to-day Nazzareno Carlolo, twenty-two years of age, was held in $1,000 for a continued hearing on Monday on the charge of fraudulently enticing away from home Frances Giacoppo, under sixteen years of age, of No. 2 Tyler court, Somerville. According to Leo Giacoppo, the father of the girl, Frances and Garlolo went to Providence on August 1 and were married. The father also claims that his daughter took $100 that was in the store when she left with Carlolo.

Good Things to Eat.

Food continues at prices which make it hard for housekeepers to "set the table" without spending a lot of real money. Market prices began to pick up with a rush this week. Families got back from the beach and the mountains to send children to school, and what to eat is once more a big, troublesome question for the maternal heads of thousands of families.

Beef is on the high price level again. It is said that retailers are making less profits on the best grades than ever. The wholesalers are accused of taking it all.

Lamb is four cents a pound lower than a month ago. Poultry is quite reasonable. Native broilers are selling from 25 to 28 cents, and western broilers three cents cheaper. Chicken turkeys are in the market. They weigh from three to four pounds, and sell at $1.75 to $2 each. Guinea chickens, which make a good substitute for partridge, are selling at $1.75 to $2.

Shore birds, including summer yellow legs, winter yellow legs, beetle-head plover and Eskimo curlew are plenty. The last named bringing 65 cents each.

Butter is high, best boxes and prints bringing 40 cents and best tub cuts bringing 37 cents. Best eggs, nearbys, are worth 42 cents. Green peas are selling at $1 a peck.

There are some large, fancy peaches from Colorado at 60 cents a dozen, and a fine variety of plums, including the red gross, kelsey, Italian prune, grand duke and sweet plum.

Sirloin roast and steak are 28c, porter house steak 30c., rump steak 35c., and veal steak 35c.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

LAKE COPPER GOES TO 36

STATE STREET, Sept. 11, Noon.—The features of the local market this forenoon were the strength of the so-called Anster stocks, with Hayden the principal buyer of them. Arizona Commercial stiffened to 13⅝ and Boston & Corbin touched 21.

Copper shares in general opened firm, but lost their early buoyancy. Lake Copper was strong, selling up to 36 on favorable advices from the mine relative to the ore body, but settled fractionally. North Butte became soft the closing hour and sold off 1¼ to 56⅝. Isle Royale also fell a point and over to 24⅛, and U. S. Smelting went back to 54½.

Union Pacific topped yesterday's price by touching 210⅝, or within ⅛ of the high in New York. Free profit taking caused it to fall back to under 208. Steel Common also fell a point to close to 79. Amalgamated opened at 81⅝, but yielded over two points.

Curb trading was one of specialties. Davis Daly and First National were active and firm. Rhode Island Coal showed good support.

BANK PRESIDENT AND BUSY AT 91

DEDHAM, Sept. 11.—Ninety-one years old is Augustus B. Endicott, president of the Dedham National Bank, ex-High Sheriff of Norfolk County and so many other "exes" that it would be hard to enumerate them.

Mr. Endicott passed his birthday quietly, visiting the bank as is his custom, and in the evening held an informal reception at his residence on Guild road.

U. P.'S UPWARD RUSH BROKEN

By T. C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—The $25,000,000 pool that drove the price of Union Pacific common stock up 12 points yesterday was again strongly in evidence when the stock market opened to-day, and the securities were advanced an additional four points within a few minutes. This meant that the value of this one of the Harriman properties had increased $52,000,000 since the great railroad man's death.

Throughout the first hour the market was nervous and irregular, with interest confined to Union Pacific common and preferred and to Reading, which scored an advance of 1½ points. The buying of the Pacific stocks was so brisk that it could not be followed at times and its nature excited considerable uneasiness.

Union Pacific Drops.

Profit-taking sales caused a decline in Union Pacific of over 3 points from the best prices established earlier in the trading. The gains in New York Central, Southern Pacific, Reading and Steel shares were wiped out and replaced with losses of about a point.

Copper shares were heavy. Amalgamated declined nearly 3 points, while Anaconda lost one and five-eighths points.

Apprehension over the anti-trust suit brought against the American Ice Company caused stock of the American Ice Securities Company to decline nearly five points. It recovered about 2 points.

The general stock market closed quiet with prices at the lowest of the session.

CLEARS $2,250 ON $143 STOCK

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—When the stock market was soaring yesterday stories were many of those who had profited by their belief that E. H. Harriman's death had been sufficiently discounted to prevent anything like a real break in the market. None of the stories of those who had bought the market in London or who had put in overnight orders to buy at the opening could quite touch the experience of a customer of Arthur Lewin of the Consolidated Exchange, who sent into the New Street put and call crowd on Thursday afternoon and snapped up a call on 1,000 shares of Union Pacific, good yesterday or to-day at 198½.

This man for $285 purchased a call on 1,000 shares at that figure. He cleared $2,250 on 500 shares, giving him a chance to realize on the rest of the shares to-day.

BOY HIT BY TRAIN.

James Griffin, 11 years old, son of Bernard Griffin of West Quincy, was struck by a train on the Granite branch of the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad while walking alongside the track near the Bates avenue bridge. The bones of the left leg at the knee were fractured and his head was badly cut.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and It Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who for over thirty-five years has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 210 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you, by return mail, enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

LADIES CORNER

BY HORTENSE DEBRIS

HORTENSE

DEAR MISS DEBRIS—
I AM A YOUNG LADY OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE BUT UNFORTUNATELY HAVE BUT ONE EYE. I AM ALSO IN LOVE WITH A HANDSOME YOUNG POLICEMAN WHO HAS BEEN VERY ATTENTIVE TO ME FOR SOME TIME. HE IS A VERY LITERARY COP AND OFTEN BREATHES MOUTHFULS OF POETRY INTO MY EAR. HE CALLS ME HIS ONE BEST BET.
LAST NIGHT HE WAS FULL OF POETRY, SO FULL OF POETRY THAT HE COULD HARDLY WALK AND HE SAID!—
"HOW FAST THE HOURS FLY WHEN I SIT HERE AND GAZE IN YOUR EYE."
NOW I DON'T WANT TO BE SENSITIVE BUT DO YOU THINK HE WAS KIDDING MY BUM LAMP?

MISS IRIS.

MISS IRIS:—
I DON'T THINK THE YOUNG MAN INTENDED ANY OFFENSE. HE WAS UNDOUBTEDLY APOLOGIZING FOR STAYING SO LONG. HE EVIDENTLY WAS EXPLAINING THAT IF AN ORDINARY LOVER WAS ENTITLED TO SIT AND GAZE INTO A TWO-EYED SWEETHEART'S EYES FOR 2 HOURS, THAT HE WAS ENTITLED TO A FOUR-HOUR LOOK AT ONE EYE.

CHESBRO, WHOSE WILD PITCH GAVE BOSTON THE PENNANT, JOINS RED SOX

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 11.—Happy Jack Chesbro is now a member of the Red Sox team. The famous twirler, whose wild pitch in the closing day of the American League championship in 1904 gave Boston the pennant, was signed to-day by President Taylor of the Red Sox, and the veteran pitcher will report at the Huntington Avenue Grounds on Monday.

In making the deal with the New York Americans President Taylor and Manager Lake decided to take a chance. According to the terms of the transfer the Boston Club has until May 1 of next year to try him, and if he does not prove satisfactory he will be returned to the New York Club.

Chesbro will be sent to Hot Springs early next year to get in condition and by May 1 it will be pretty nearly established whether the veteran is all in or not.

Happy Jack had a phenomenal season in 1904. He developed the spit ball and won something like seventeen straight games for the Yankees. His record that season was clearly the best in the country, but that wild pitch which cost his team the championship, seemed to have broken h's back and he has not been the same pitcher since.

The Boston Club proposes to try him out throughly. It has little to lose and may be that Chesbro will come back to his old form. President Taylor and Manager Lake decided that he was worth taking a chance on.

JOHNSON SAYS HE WAS NOT IN BEST SHAPE

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 11.—Accepting his victory of Al Kaufman as a mater of course and refusing to be unduly elated with his easy match, Jack went out for a long auto ride this morning over the roads of San Mateo County, stating after his return that it was the first time in three weeks that he had felt perfectly free.

"But don't think for a moment that I intend to let up at all in my training work," the colored giant told a party of friends at his training quarters. "There won't be any let up on my part for I intend to be in the finish of condition for the Ketchel match if there is any Ketchel after Langford gets through with him," the champion continued.

"Were you really extended at any time of the battle?" he was asked.

"I was slowed up in the ninth and tenth rounds," Jack replied, "because I was not in the best of shape having, as everybody knows, taken the match on at short notice. Had I been as good as I was the day I boxed Tommy Burns in Australia I would have stopped Kaufman inside of six rounds. Burns is a better fighter than Kaufman."

JOHNNY KLING LIKELY TO BE BLACKLISTED

CINCINNATI, Sept. 11.—August Herrmann, chairman of the National Baseball Commission, said to-day that if John Kling, former catcher of the Chicago National League club, played with his Kansas City team of semi-professionals against the Logan Square team of Chicago, as reported, he would come under the rule banishing from organized baseball for a term of three years any player who while on the reserve list of a National agreement club plays with or against a team harboring ineligible players. The Logan Square team is said to contain several such players.

When his attention was called to a report from Chicago to-day that Kling had played against the Logan Square team Herrmann said: "If it is true that Kling has played against ineligible players, and the reports from Chicago indicate that he has done so, things look mighty bad for him. He has laid himself liable to suspension and I can't see how it will be possible for him to evade sentence."

LEARY TO COACH CRIMSON FOOTBALL.

Leo H. Leary, who has been assistant physical director in the Boston High Schools, will be a member of the coaching staff that will aid Coach Percy D. Haughton in shaping the Harvard football eleven this Fall. As yet the entire staff that will assist Haughton has not been made known.

It is figured that Leary will look after the end material at Harvard. He is a master of the rudiments of the game, and is a good teacher. With these assets, the Harvard football management believes he will prove himself a clever acquisition to the squad of men who will help Coach Haughton.

Just who Dr. Thomas F. Harrington, Supervisor of Hygiene, will place in charge at Mechanic Arts High School, in Leary's place, will not be made known for a few days.

COLTS HAVE DISTEMPER.

John Young, the Allen Farm trainer now located at Readville, says that several of the youngsters in his string have been suffering from a slight attack of distemper, which has caused them to cough and discharge from the nose, so as to interfere temporarily with their improvement in speed. No serious results are anticipated, however.

RECORD FOR THEIR AGE.

Ed Custer (3) (2:12¼) and Bertha C. (3) (2:12¾), hold the record for brother and sister of their ages. They are by Baronmore (2:14¼) from Marble (2:14) by Kingley.

CRITERION A. A. IS AFTER TOP HONORS

One of the hardest games of the season is expected when the fast Criterion A. A. cross bats with the champion Andrew A. A. of South Boston, to-day. The Andrews claim the championship of the State, having defeated the fastest teams, including the Roger Wolcotts, and will defend the title against all comers. In the first contest between the Andrews and Criterions, the former won, the score being 4 to 1. Should the Criterions win this afternoon's game, the third contest will be held at the National League grounds for the championship. Killiorn or Baughman with Sullivan on the receiving end will be the battery for the Criterions, while Femuries and Lewis will work for the champs. The game will be called at 3 o'clock at Kemp street grounds, Dorchester.

CAMBRIDGE BOY TO BE COACH IN SOUTH

Joe Bean of Cambridge, former big league ball player who this season played on the Lawrence team of the New England League and did scout duty for the Red Sox, has been re-engaged as physical director at Marist College, Atlanta, Ga.

Joe will have entire charge of all the athletic teams and of the gymnasium work. The college does not support a football team, so the Cambridge man will devote all his attention to developing the track and baseball teams in the Fall for later competition.

ABE ATTELL RISKS TITLE WITH O'TOOLE

There is some class to that bout at the Armory A. A. next week with Champion Abe Attell as one of the warriors. He is to tackle the toughest nut in Philadelphia to crack for his size—Tommy O'Toole. Quaker fans would walk a long way to see this pair get together, as they saw them once in a six-round entertainment, which whetted their appetites for more. They figured that a longer route would be just what their favorite wanted against the slippery Abe, and the chance has come for Tommy and he won't overlook it.

O'Toole really beat Matty Baldwin here during last Winter's campaign, and he put Joey Bowker away in a couple of rounds. These two feats are worth considering. He is always coming, while Attell is likely to be moving the other way, as he has been fighting a long time and must give way sooner or later.

The foxy Abe will be here to-morrow with his manager to finish up his training. He hasn't been seen by the local fans since he showed his skill against Jimmy Walsh.

Both boys are to weigh in at 122 pounds, so the match will be for the championship.

A NEW COLT RECORD.

Al Stanley placed the world's three-year-old trotting record over a half-mile track colt is by Todd (2:14¾), from Moonrise, by Jay Hawker (3) (2:14¾).

JEFF'S FATHER THREATENS TO DISOWN HIM

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 11.—"If my son should ever fight Jack Johnson I would be tempted to disown him," was the startling statement made yesterday by Rev. A. C. Jeffries, father of the undefeated heavyweight champion of the world before he left Los Angeles for the East. He continued.

"I do not believe, howevr, that this step on my part will ever be necessary, for, mark my words, Jim Jeffries will never fight Jack Johnson."

STRAIGHT DOPE
FOR SPORT FANS

MR. ABE ATTELL WILL BE IN OUR idst the early part of next week, being lled to hold a reception at the Armory A. A. Tuesday night. Tommy O'Toole of hiladelphia has been selected to assist, d the affair savors of a championship atch, as both boys weigh in at the atherweight weight. I'll be glad to see ese two youngsters perform again, as ey should provide good entertainment. I ill also be glad to see the bouts pulled f without the chance of such a fiasco as as sprung last week through the two dges and one referee system. The triple mpire plan looked good, but it will not ork as satisfactorily as the old method. he Armory A. A. is one of the best and quarest clubs in the country, and its rep tation for fair dealing will prevent the w work of last week's judges from doing any permanent harm.

I AM GLAD TO PRINT THE FOLLOW g as I was impressed with the showing Vest, who is a deaf mute, made against n opponent who was much heavier. I ink the match maker of the Armory ould do well to give the boy a match gain soon.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
Will you please publish in your paper and let the public of Boston know that Harry West, who fought at the Armory, Tuesday, had only 2 days to train. I am willing to let him fight any boy who can show weight, 135 pounds, at any club, and put up a side bet of $100, saying he will win. The showing he put up at the Armory under the conditions entitles him to a go with the best of them. Thanking you in advance, I am very respectfully,
JULIAN ABRAMS.
195 Richmond st., Providence, R. I., manager Harry West and Young Dyson.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
The Norfolks of Dorchester are the original fourteen-year-old champions of the state, having beaten the Saracens Labor Day. The Hillsides of Medford were challenged all season by the Norfolks, but finally squelled. They have won twenty-seven games this season. Playing the strongest teams of their average.
The Norfolks played a twenty-four inning game with the Rosemonts this season, pulling out a victory.
When it comes to baseball, this team can travel some, and believe me, they are the only recognized champions for their age, having a large following.
OLD TIMER.
Dorchester, September 10.

I HAVE A LETTER FROM A MAN WHO hinks he knows something and is trying to ass it along to me. He says that Vincent owers, the jockey who has been set down y the judges of the metropolitan tracks, s the victim of a conspiracy. He is. He s the victim of a conspiracy to separate lot of yaps from their money and he is ne of the conspirators. The boy got in ad and the judges or stewards or who ver did it, did well to set him down. he boy had his chance and did not take t. When he first commenced to keep ad company he was riding at the Church ll Downs track. Judge Price learned that he boy was in danger of going wrong nd gave him a fatherly talk. As the re ult Powers was taken suddenly ill and ent home. He did not return during the meeting and Judge Price prescribed a rest that lasted until the close of the following meeting at Latonia. He didn't take any official action, just advised the boy to get sick and think it all over while he was recovering. Powers evidently had and the judges or stewards or who old tricks again at Saratoga. I hope they will never let him accept a mount again. The game is hard enough without such as he.

FRANK MALONEY, A 105-POUND BOY, who lives at No. 17 Russell street, asks me to issue a challenge for him to box any boy about Boston at that weight. I am not issuing any challenges for anyone, but I will state that the boy Frank is after particularly is Max Landy, and he would like to have a match arranged as one of the preliminaries at the Armory A. A. Young Maloney has never boxed professionally and says his greatest claim to fame is that he knocked Teddy Murphy and another boy out the same night at the B. A. A.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
One year ago A bet B that Peary would be the first man to reach the Pole. Who wins?
HENRY FRENCH.
Lynn.

You're quite a kidder, Henry, but I'm next to your curves. I know who discovered the Pole, all right, all right, but I won't tell you because you are trying to get me in trouble with one of my old college chums, Peary or Cook.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
Well, "we've gone and done it." The Eastern A. A. and the Revere A. A. will clash Saturday in a series of three games for the championship of Revere and a purse of $10. The whole town is talking about the games and the largest crowds of the year are expected. We have secured the services of "Big" Mooney to play first base, and with the Cox brothers, "Chris" of the Haverhill (New England League) team included, we have a team that will wipe the Easterns from the map. If possible we would like to have you on hand to witness the slaughter, and there will be a big celebration at the clubhouse after the game. Now let us thank you for your efforts in our behalf, and if you ever journey down Revere way, drop in at the clubhouse, say the word and it is yours. Yours very truly,
JOSEPH J. LEONARD.
Manager Revere A. A.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
I would like to have you publish what I have written below in your next edition and if you receive a reply publish it as soon as possible.
"Will the Manager of the team that played the West Lynn A. C. last Saturday, in Lynn, kindly send name and address to Straight Dope Editor of the pitcher of his team. He may also send address of the catcher."
J. F. L., Lynn.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
The Baltics of Cambridge, who have won eighteen out of twenty games played, would like to play any eighteen-nineteen-year-old team for the remainder of the season. We would like to play the Mattapan A. A. their last playing Saturday of the year.
GEO. S. RYAN.
15 Ninth Street, Cambridge.

Straight Dope, Boston American:
To settle an argument, will you let me know through your valued column the largest attendance at any football game in America; also the attendance at last year's Yale-Harvard game and oblige
M. W. M.,
Roxbury, Sept. 6, 1909.

About 40,000 persons saw the Yale-Harvard game last year. I have no records on the record attendance.

FLAG WINNERS TO PLAY SERIES

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 11.—There is a strong probability that if Milwaukee wins the American Association pennant a series of championship games will be arranged with the winners of the Eastern league, which will doubtless be Rochester. Seven or nine games will be played, the first three at Milwaukee and the balance in the East.

The Milwaukee players have taken the matter up with Owner Havenor and he has offered them the use of the park.

Should the series be arranged a big field day would be arranged at the same time.

Manager McCloskey is in favor of the proposition. Negotiations will be opened at once with Rochester.

WAGNER PASSES 200 HIT MARK

What would the Pittsburg team be without Wagner? He passed the 200 hit mark yesterday, the only batter in the National League to have that total. He also connected a triple and two doubles in the game against the Reds, and that's not an extraordinary day's work for him, either.

YOUNG ERNE IS EASY WINNER

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 11.—Sizing up his opponent in the early rounds and spurting nicely at the finish, Young Erne of Gray's Ferry won from Willie Lucas in the six-round bout at the Nonpareil A. C.

Erne was contented to let Lucas do most of the leading in the first two rounds and the Fairmount lad started as though he intended to put Yi Yi out of commission.

In the meantime Erne was landing effectively, but did not extend himself until the third, when he cut loose with a series of hard rights and lefts. There was really no question about the winner after the second round, as Yi Yi mixed his blows and jabs up so neatly that he had Lucas confused a number of times.

Erne danced around Lucas in the fifth and sixth periods and slipped over several wicked jolts.

LOCAL-BRED CHAMPS.

Both Hamburg Belle and Uhlan were New England raised. The former was foaled in Connecticut, the latter in Massachusetts. Sadie Mac (2:06¼), The Leading Lady (3) (2:07), champion three-year-old trotting filly, were also bred in Massachusetts.

JIM DRISCOLL AND MORAN CAN'T AGREE ON MATCH

Jim Driscoll and Owen Moran are still wrangling about their proposed fight in London. Jim declares that Moran ran out of the match, and offers to prove that no big offer such as Moran claims he received from here was sent over. Moran then wrote the following letter to the Sportsman:

"Sir—I have been quite surprised these last few days to see in your columns what has appeared with regard to the fight between Driscoll and myself, and I will ask you to please publish this letter so that the public can see both sides of the question.

"As you know, at our meeting last Monday week, when five of us and your representative met at your office, the only reasonable offers which had been received were the one from Mr. Jacobs and the other from America.

"Mr. Shirley then made his offer, and I think these are the words he used: 'Owen, I have come to make an offer to you on behalf of the Welsh Syndicate, and we will give you $1,200 and a percentage of the gate receipts for your share, win, lose or draw, if you will fight at Mountain Ash.' I replied: 'No, I don't want any percentage of the gate; I want a fixed sum. I don't want to have on my mind anything about the gate; when I go in the ring, I want to go with one idea—to fight.'

"Mr. Shirley then said: 'Well, failing Mr. Jacob's depositing his £3,000 with the Sportsman to-morrow, I will forward a check for £1,500 for your share, win, lose or draw, the fight to take place at Mountain Ash.' I said: 'Yes, that will do for me, and I will fight Driscoll whenever you like.' And we came away with the idea that everything was settled.

"I came straight away the same night (Monday) here to my training quarters, and I have never left them since. The next thing that I see in the paper is an offer from Mr. Shirley for this same syndicate for a purse £2,000, £1,200 to the winner, and £800 to the loser. Now, all I want to know is: Is it fair and straightforward after offering me £1,500 for my share, win, lose, or draw, to offer this?

"All I wish to say is this: Let Mr. Shirley be as good as his word and stake his money, and I will fight Driscoll wherever he likes, as I said I would. If this is not the truth, and every word of it, I will leave it to your representative, who was at the meeting, to contradict any syllable of it. I will only make one condition, and that is that the fight shall be delayed a little longer, so that I can get myself thoroughly fit, as I intend to be when I fight—I am, yours truly,

"OWEN MORAN."

Billy McCarney, writing from Frisco, says:

"Heiny Rafael will start East soon with Johnny Frayne, and is thinking of bringing Jimmy Carroll with him. Carroll is the kid who beat Monte Attell here and also drew once. He will be a great card for Wagner, McGovern and those little fellows East. They want Nelson to meet Frayne here Thanksgiving eve, and if it falls through Heiny will go East right away.

"Jack Grace wanted me to go to Australia with him but I balked. I'm far enough away from home right now and besides I'm not the best swimmer in the world."

Baseball News and Notes

Artie Hoffman, of the Cubs, has fallen off considerably in his batting since July.

* * *

Second Baseman Egan of Cincinnati has made only two errors in his last 32 games.

* * *

Manager Clark Griffith dotes on tall pitchers. He is himself not a tall man, yet was a great pitcher in his day.

* * *

Cy Seymour has been covering lots of ground for the Giants. He never fielded better, and his hits have been timely.

* * *

The Three Forks (Ark.) team has a right fielder who is not under contract to Connie Mack. Great excitement prevails.

* * *

"Jakey" Atz and Lee Tannehill are the mainstays of the White Sox infield in fielding.

* * *

Among the pitchers who can stand lots of work Arellanes, of the Boston Red Sox, looms up.

* * *

First Baseman Konetchy is doing the star playing for the St. Louis Club. The big first baseman is hitting the ball hard and scoring often.

* * *

The season's series between the Pirates and the Cubs now stands 11 to 6 in favor of the Pirates. All the games the Cubs have won have been taken in Pittsburg.

* * *

Hack Spencer out in St. Paul is batting like a house on fire. In the last 10 games or so he has hit for about .395. He is catching practically every game.

* * *

Rube Geyer, the mainstay of the Columbus American Association pitching staff, cost Roger Bresnahan $5,000. The Cardinals have spent not less than $30,000 on new talent.

* * *

Pitcher Kuelzer, of Lawrence; Infielder Redmond Winston, of Salem; Outfielder Downey, of Oklahoma, and Outfielder Wheat, of Mobile, reported to the Brooklyn club a few days ago.

* * *

Charles Murphy has asked his catchers to wear knee protectors as well as shin guards regularly. He doesn't want to risk an accident such as put Larry McLean out of the game.

* * *

Johnny Kling says he thinks the Cubs will win the pennant. Maybe he thinks Charlie Murphy will hand him his release if he says a few nice things about the Windy City club.

* * *

Considering the team behind him, Bell, of Brooklyn, has been pitching as well as any box man in the league.

* * *

"Honey Boy" Evans, the minstrel, who offered the cup which was won by Hans Wagner last year for being the champion batsman of the major leagues, has put up a similar trophy this season.

* * *

Manager Griffith, of Cincinnati, states that he will confine his fall experimenting to outfielders, being quite satisfied with his infield and battery departments.

* * *

Umpire Bush, of the South Michigan league, was fined $25 for assaulting Manager Morrisey, of Lansing, the other day.

* * *

President Herrmann, of Cincinnati, says he is perfectly satisfied with Griffith's work at the head of the Reds.

* * *

Pitcher Sam Leever predicts that Adams will be one of the best pitchers in the National League next year.

* * *

The Cubs are carrying eight pitchers: Reulbach, Brown, Kroh, Overall, Pfiester, Hagerman, Ragon and Higginbotham.

* * *

Brooklyn has drafted Pitcher Fletcher of Uniontown, in the Pawva eague, and Detroit has drafted Spencer of Davenport, Ia.

* * *

There is a real lemon in baseball at last. Lee Lemon, of Burlington, has been purchased by Indianapolis. He is a catcher.

* * *

The Athletics have 20 games to play at home yet, and Captain Davis figures on the team utilizing those 20 to win the pennant.

* * *

If Dolly Gray and Bob Groom develop as young pitchers are expected to do after a year's experience in fast company, the Nationals should have a pair of clever young twirlers next year.

* * *

The Highlanders may not win the American League pennant, but are having a heap of fun. Stalling's men have virtually put the Boston Red Sox and the Athletics out of the running.

* * *

Eddie Grant is not playing as brilliant a game for the Phillies this year as he did last season.

* * *

Big Chief Meyers is slowly declining in his batting. The big Injun must get busy with the war-club and climb back among the .300 people.

* * *

As soon as Archer became the Cubs' regular catcher they began to win all their games. As soon as Archer was hurt the big slump came. He must be the real mascot of the club.

* * *

Reliable rumors are afloat that Bill Bernhard, manager of the Nashville club of the Southern league, has been selected to manage the Toledo team next season in place of Socks Seybold. President Armour refuses to talk on the subject.

* * *

John T. Brush writes from Carlsbad that he is being benefited by the waters. He adds: "Wonderful place, this, where one touches elbows with the entire world. Every phase of humanity from king to beggar is in evidence. I regret that I did not come earlier."

* * *

In Cincinnati they believe that Dick Egan, the whirlwind second baseman, is the twenty-four carat find of the season in the National League. He is clouting the ball better than .300 and his outfielding record is near perfect, having made but one error in his last thirty-one games. Last season Egan was with Harrisburg in the Tri-State League, and Manager Griffith has frequently declared that $10,000 would not make him even think of letting go of Egan.

GOLF GOSSIP
NEWS OF THE LINKS

It is very often the case that players participating in an open tournament notice not only the course, and the score board, but the management of the meeting. It is seldom that we ever see more than a committee of one doing anything and this was the case at a recent tourney. The committee had been appointed and all promised to attend the tournament, and do all in their power to make it a success. Had it not been for the persistency and loyalty of the president of the club things would have indeed been in a sorry plight at the Worcester Golf Club's tourney. Mr. Bachelder deserves great praise for the big success that the tournament scored. He may duly feel that the thanks of visiting players and their appreciation for his work is honestly and wholly his.

Perhaps there is nothing in the club, but there seems as if there must be for the mild iron, which was presented to Mr. D. M. Cole of the Tekoa Golf Club, by Mr. Walter J. Travis netted him a one, on a 157-yard hole on his home course. The club was given to Mr. Cole as a prize for jumbled golf terms which appear in the American Golfer edited by Mr. Travis.

A great many tournaments are scheduled for to-day at the various clubs. At the Brae Burn Country Club there will be a qualifying round for the club championship, open tournaments will be in progress at the Commonwealth Country and Bellevue Golf Clubs, Albermarle will hold its second team match while there will be a golf ball sweepstakes at Hatherly. Fall River will hold a handicap vs. a Bogey competition and the Salem Golf Club will place Col. Bogey against three-fourths of their handicap.

During the Spring tournament at Garden City, Robert C. Watson enjoyed a unique experience. In every one of his three matches he carried his match to the nineteenth hole, winning the first two and losing the third to Walter J. Travis. As the playing of this extra hole spoiled the proverbial nineteenth hole, that renowned and popular cup became the twentieth in this case.

Nearly everybody in Boston reads the AMERICAN.

KANALY GETS DESERVING HONOR

Technology's Track Coach Frank M. Kanaly the prominent distance runner and erstwhile adversary of Al Shrub has been appointed to a position as director of athletics by the Tech faculty. Frank has been engaged for the past two years by the Tech A. A. to coach the track and cross country teams, and his new position as a member of the faculty is due in part to his turning out of winning teams.

Kanaly will have entire charge of the physical training of the students, but will continue to coach the teams, urging the men to substitute track work for the regular gym classes which are required in the curriculum.

MARTO SHADES YOUNG OTTO

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—"Young" Otto and Johnny Marto, lightweights of this city, fought ten rounds before the Fairmount Athletic Club, with Marto having a shade the better of it. Otto had a fairly good lead up to the sixth round, but soon tired, while Marto forced the fight until the final round.

N. E. LEAGUE PENNANT RACE DECIDED TODAY

Will Worcester be a four-time winner of the New England League? That question will be settled to-day as the New England League season closes with the last scheduled games.

It all depends what Brockton can do in the double-header with Fall River. Worcester has one game to play with Haverhill. If Haverhill wins and Brockton wins the two contests then it would be Brockton holding the title of champion.

The race was never closer in the New England circuit, and the weather may yet decide the outcome.

Should Brockton play and win, and the weather prevent the game at Haverhill, Worcester will be champion for the fourth straight year. Should Worcester play and lose and Brockton not play, Worcester will take the flag.

GOOD RACING CARD AT SO. FRAMINGHAM

There will be a lot of good trotters and pacers entered in the races offered by the Middlesex Fair for decision at South Framingham, Wednesday and Thursday, September 22 and 23, with Sam B. Hastings, the chairman of the race committee.

The announced classes are: For Wednesday, the 2:35 for a purse of $150, and the 2:17 for a purse of $200. Thursday is the 2:25 for a purse of $200, and a special race of half mile heats, purse $50, no entrance fee, and eligible to the event are horses owned in the district and by any member of a New England driving club. All of the races are for trotters and pacers.

Entries close with Mr. Hastings, Wayland, on September 15, but records made on September 10 or later are not a bar.

BIG ATHLETES AT REVERE TO-NIGHT

There will be a big electric light amateur track meet at the Revere Cycle Park to-night, the event being the attraction at Revere Beach. The entry list includes nearly every amateur of note in New England, including Joe Ballard, senior and junior national mile champ; Oscar Hedlund of the Brookline gym, Herbert Gidney and Llewellyn of the B. A. A., Ike Sheehan and Bill McVicker of the South Boston A. A., Barth of Stone School and O'Hara, the New England interscholastic 40-yard champ.

In addition to the amateur games there will be an amateur bicycle race of five miles, and the prospects are that the lovers of the bicycle game will see some real racing, as this is the last one of the season.

BOSTON FIRE LADDIES ON THE DIAMOND

The Boston Fire Department baseball team, with a record of seven consecutive victories, will endeavor to annex the two most important games scheduled for the season by Manager Maloney with the Springfield and New York Fire Department baseball teams.

Today the Boston fire laddies will journey to Springfield and try to win the second game between the two teams, the first game being won by Boston by the score of 13 to 3 at Boston. It is expected that a large following will accompany the team, where extensive arrangements are being made to receive the Boston boys.

On Thursday, September 16, the most important game of the year scheduled will be played between the New York and Boston fire teams at Plymouth, Mass., at the convention of the Massachusetts State Firemen's Relief Association. Delegates from all over the country will be present, and it is expected a hot battle will be on for supremacy between the two greatest municipal teams in the country.

The seven consecutive victories won by Boston's fire fighters are as follows: Boston-Missouri, U. S. S., 6 to 5; Boston-Springfield Fire Department, 13 to 3; Boston Fire Department-Boston Police, 12-4; Fall River Police-Boston, 10-6; Boston-Cambridge Fire Department, 13-6; Lynn Police-Boston, 7-1; Boston-Orpheum Theatre, 14-4.

SOCCER SEASON WILL OPEN TO-DAY

At 3 o'clock this afternoon the fall soccer football season will make its official entry. In the Boston and District League three games will be played. The champion Boston Rovers meet Clan McPherson eleven of Lawrence at Franklin Park, the Americans travel to Lynn to meet Lynn City, the Will- [illegible] home to the Brockton F. C. A great game will mark the opening of the Lawrence, Lowell and District league, Lawrence and Andover meeting on the former's ground. The British-Americans will play one of the Methuen elevens at Lawrence, while of the two Manchester teams the city eleven will entertain Bunting of Lowell at Manchester, and the Light Blues will come to Massachusetts to meet Methuen A. C.

EVERETT CANDIDATES OUT.

The Everett high school football candidates are practicing at Everett every day for the coming season under the direction of Coach Leo O'Donnell. Ca'ptain Charles Brickley is confident that his team will win the Suburban League championship pennant. George Brickley, a younger brother of the team's captain, is a candidate for quarterback position.

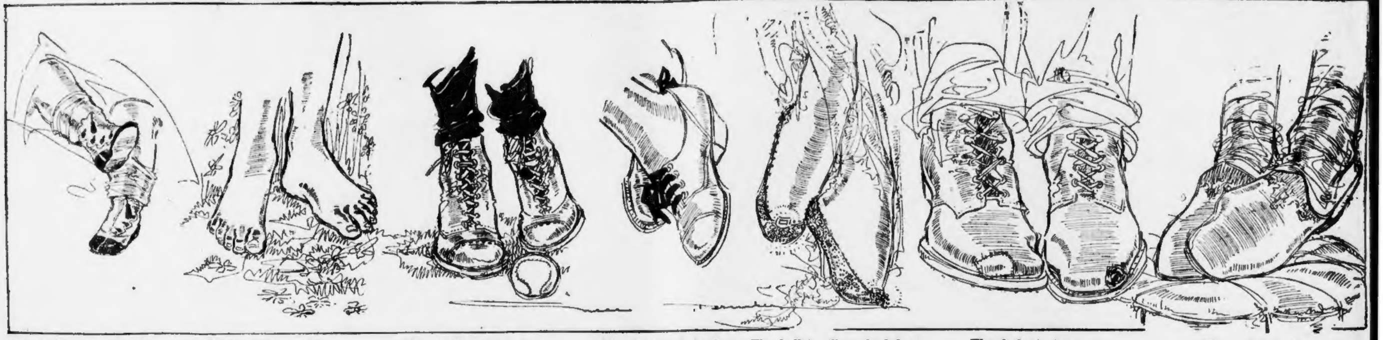
"I WILL PRAISE THE LORD, FOR I AM FEARFULLY AND WONDERFULLY MADE"

The Wonderful Feet We Have---By Nell Brinkley



The baby's doughy feet. The boy's bare feet. The scuffed boy's feet. The first high heels. The belle's silken-shod feet. The father's feet. The old feet that wait.

HAVE you watched them go in and out, steadily, unfailing, machine-like, and thought about 'em? Your feet:

The shapely, five-fingered, marvelous-soled runners, carrying the burden of life almost equally with your quietly-pounding heart, almost as enduring and tireless. They carry the world on its way.

Some have gypsied men all over the green earth, and these feet are brown and dusty, and clingers to the soil, the rich mother-earth: they go back to it, they tread it, they call for it and dream of it when they are away from it, shut in the sole-burning city streets; some of these gypsy feet are the wildest, wildest wanderers over the world, yet they have brought the life they carried to some bright star of ambition; but the gypsy way is out of the world's way, a wanton way, and it leads away from the stars of the world's work, and its treaders are sure almost always obscure.

Some of those gypsy feet long and burn for the road and its song, and never leave the asphalt; some of these gypsy feet go wild for the open road and play hookey for a brief ecstasy with the earth that calls them; gypsy feet are of the earth, her children, and when she calls they come.

There are white, fiery, tense feet that travel the silver way to a star; unearthly feet, that are seekers and tread the very star-dust, carrying their lives out of our grasp and understanding; starry feet that bring back spoil from unknown fields and give it to us in words that we may read and wonder at the poet-feet, the painter, the tale-maker, the weaver, the musician, the seekers, they that know fairy paths and walk there.

Feet That Never Loiter

There are fat feet that mope; and stupid feet that plod and never turn aside for a flower by the road or loiter for the splendor of the spreading sunset that steeps and dyes the world.

There are tired feet that have travelled hard and never seem to find the rose paths or even the pleasant healing dust of a smooth lane—all their roads are clods and ruts and wounding stones.

There are tender feet that tread, marvelously, their way through a network of rough country and find only the shady, flower-petalled hidden paths.

There are peaceful feet, and warrior-feet that always seem to find a fight.

The feet tire with the heart. When its beat slows they grow uncertain and tottering and are prone to sit beside the way and fuse on the back trail and not dream of the highway any more. And when the heart dies the feet grow cold and still and stiff.

The lover dreams of the feet of his lady and calls them, in his heart, little white sprays of dogwood blossom and wishes he might some day hold them, the two, in his hand when they were cold.

Poets have written of them and their strength and sung of a damosel and "the silver of her feet."

Feet have been cased and shod in velvet and skins and jewels and broidery and satin, with high heels and none; they are bound and tormented in one heathen country and left free and graceful in another.

Men have sat at wise feet to learn the wisdom of their journeying, they have bent their knees at a queen's and the woman's they love.

The gentle Christ washed the quarreling feet of His disciples to point the way those quarreling feet should go.

The Witchery of Child Feet

The mother cuddles and crushes the fat feet that are so doughy and no-good, and pretty, yet that they give her baby a rolling gait like a sailor, and wonders with cold around her heart what path they will harden their rose-leaf on; poor little baby feet, heavy with prophecy and tender with their newness.

The idling stranger dabs a wistful wet eye while he watches the lithe, slim, little ten-year-old feet starting so white at the beginning of Summer and coming out in the Autumn a beautiful auburn; feet that fly all day long, that know the sqush of mud between their toes, and the spurt of dust, the smooth cold of the sleek, singing brook, the brush of flowers against their ankles, the deep, sweet terror of crawling jungles of grass; feet that tread fairy paths then if they never do again, wise then, if they never are again.

The stranger whispers, "You are close to earth, child feet, you draw from her life—but you never will be again—unless you turn gypsy."

The snub-nosed, scuffed boy's feet—his mother worries about 'em; the very earth grows things in a wink for him to scrape and knock them against.

They are cut and bandaged and their shoes are weary, reckless, past-caring, dusty things as they sit dead-tired by his bed at night—but, oh, the joy they know!

The Tragedies They Show

Feet just growing up and wanting to take the trail—innocent—full of youth's scorn of snags; daring, jaunty little feet just at the crossroads where the bypaths run into the great universal highway.

The belle's pretty silken feet, with the soft, faint rose of flesh showing through the silk, paper-shod, in embroidery and cloth-of-gold and little buckles—feet that are eyed and worshipped, maybe, by one—two—three—four? Little feet they are that travel on hearts and are very gay.

And the father's feet—maybe you see those feet in some far country from "your aine." Maybe your father is old and has plenty now, but you remember, and you know these "father's feet." Worn, tired feet that never complain—that have plodded back and forth through long life, their shoes so old and patched and apologetic and humble, carefully kept and made to last, monstrous soles bought heavy so they may wear long, ugly and patient.

Here's drinking tears to the army of "father's feet."

And then the feet that have sat down by the side of the road to wait, prone to muse and not dream of the forward trail any more—feet that are shrinking and growing colder—so that the hide and the cloth that cover them wither to their shape—And what ways have they known? And have they forgotten?

Do they see other trails that might have ended in more paradiseal places—or are they content because they are wise and have learned much, and all trails look alike under the mist that is closing over them? Maybe.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued)

The Duke's Stratagem.

CHARMERACE swung the crane out, hung the lantern on it, called a couple of times to Guerchard and rushed over to the door leading to the family apartments. He knew that Sonia would have understood his message, and that she would be waiting. As he opened the door she was standing there, hooded and cloaked, ready for the street.

"Quick, quick, you must go," the Duke said. "They are going to arrest you."

Clinging to him she told him she was afraid; that she did not want to go away from him. Guerchard's voice, remote, but distinct, urged him to hold the lantern a little to the right. He moved the crane and said to Sonia:

"Guerchard's pocketbook is in his overcoat. Give it to me."

With trembling hands she took out the pocketbook. The Duke slipped out one of the detective's cards, scribbled on it permission for Sonia to leave the house, signed it with an excellent imitation of Guerchard's signature, which he had seen on some papers, and gave it to her.

Sonia's Escape.

"Now go, for God's sake" he cried. "But come and see me to-morrow. If there is any reason why you can't come I will let you know. Where will you go?"

"To a little roadhouse at Passy," she replied.

"What is its telephone?"

"No. 555 fourteen."

He caught her by the shoulders and hurried her toward the street door. There, as she turned imploringly, he caught her in his arms and pressed his lips to hers. Then he turned back to the fireplace, took the lantern from the crane, swung it back and waited.

In a moment Guerchard reappeared. The Duke faced him with a smile of amusement—almost mockery.

"Did you find the flowers?" he asked.

"There were no flowers there," Guerchard answered icily. "Strange, isn't it?"

"It is strange that you didn't find the flowers," the Duke replied.

Guerchard pressed the electric button and Boursin came in.

"Arrest Mademoiselle Kritchnoff at once," he ordered.

"But, Chief, Mademoiselle Kritchnoff went out ten minutes ago."

"Idiot!" Guerchard screamed, his face white with rage. "Did I not order that no one was to leave this house without a written permit from me, over my signature?"

Two Prisoners Lost.

Boursin fished in his pocket and brought out a card. Guerchard snatched it from him, read it, and then gave the Duke, who was still laughing at him, a venomous look. "Tricked!" he exclaimed. "A forgery!"

He went over and picked up his overcoat, took out his pocketbook and counted the cards which he had left there. One of them had been stolen. The Duke regarded him closely, with no sign of anxiety, only with that exasperating smile.

"Never mind," Guerchard said to Boursin. "Has the van come for Victorie?"

"Victorie was taken away in the first van, half an hour ago, Chief," Boursin told him. "The other van has just come. Shall I send it back?"

Guerchard did not need a diagram to know one of Arsene Lupin's tricks. The wily thief or his accomplices had sent a fake van and had taken Victoire to safety. He had lost two prisoners.

It was useless to rail at fate, and he dismissed Boursin, turning malevolently to the Duke. Before he had a chance to speak the telephone rang, and he answered it.

"It is the gardener at the chateau," Guerchard said. Then, talking into the telephone, he said:

"I want to know who went into the garden yesterday to get flowers. The Duke of Charmerace? Thank you."

He hung up the telephone and turned significantly toward the still smiling young nobleman.

"You heard?" he asked.

"Yes, I heard," the Duke said and laughed in the detective's face.

CHAPTER IX.

A Duel of Wits.

THE little cluster of pink salvia which Guerchard had found on the steps of the house next door had been culled in the gardens of the chateau of Monsieur Gournay-Martin by the Duke of Charmerace. Of that and more Guerchard was certain. He was positive in his own mind that the Duke had forged the permit by which Sonia was enabled to escape.

He knew that the Duke had purposely lied about the wired flowers in the attic next door and had sent him up the chimney on a fool's errand, so that Sonia might be got out of the way.

He knew that the Duke had taken from Sonia's coat the pendant which would have sent her to jail.

But he could not prove any of these things; to openly charge them against the Duke, one of the most popular and powerful noblemen in Paris, the fiance of one of the richest heiresses, would have subjected him to ridicule and possible loss of position.

And, worst of all, as he looked into the handsome, mocking face of the young man, he knew that he was being laughed at. The most astute detective in France played with as if he were a marionette on a string, played with by a youngster!

Charmerace read the thoughts of Guerchard and his eyes gleamed with amusement. He moved away from his stand in front of the fire and dropped languidly into the arm chair in which the unfortunate Victoire had passed such an uncomfortable vigil.

Guerchard's Clew.

"Have a cigarette?" he asked Guerchard, holding out his case and preparing to light one himself.

"Americans?"

"No, Khedive specials."

"Thanks, not for me," Guerchard replied, beginning to stride up and down the room. He was finding some difficulty in getting back his equilibrium. His teeth no longer gleamed behind his old mocking smile. His face had grown serious, puzzled. He was in deeper water than he had ever been before, and he wondered which way land lay and how he might flounder ashore. The situation had at last got on his nerves.

Boursin entered hurriedly and saluted. "We have found a rag picker, Chief, who says there were three automobiles in front of the house at 5 o'clock this morning," he reported. "A man dressed as a chauffeur came down the steps."

"Anything else?"

"No, except that the rag picker found a cigarette, about a quarter smoked, on the sidewalk?"

"And smoked it?" the Duke inquired.

"No, here it is," Boursin said.

Guerchard took the half smoked cigarette and examined it with growing interest.

"A Khedive special," he said. "That is the same kind of a cigarette you smoke, Your Grace. Tell me, are there cigarettes like this at the home of your prospective father-in-law?"

"Yes, boxes of them on every table," the Duke replied.

"The thieves helped themselves to cigarettes as well as motors at the chateau," Guerchard commented. "Then they drove here."

Monsieur Gournay-Martin bustled in, his traveling bag in his hand, and followed by Germaine.

The Tiara Again

"Jacques, we are going to the Ritz," he said. His agitation seemed to have grown greater during the evening. "We can't stay here. And listen," dropping his voice mysteriously, "I am taking the tiara with me to safety. It is in this bag."

Guerchard was chatting with Germaine, his composure having returned. The Duke listened smilingly to the old gentleman.

"Don't you think you are running a great risk?" he suggested. "If this Lupin has made up his mind to get the tiara, the fact that it is in your possession may involve you in personal danger."

Terror sat heavily on the shoulders of Monsieur Gournay-Martin. He gasped at this new possibility.

"I—I—I hadn't thought of that," he said chokingly. "Jacques, do you think I can trust Guerchard?"

"I think you may trust him," Charmerace assured him.

Monsieur Gournay-Martin opened his bag, took out a jewel case and opened it, disclosing the glistening cluster of gems that formed the tiara of the Princess of Lombard.

"Isn't it a beauty?" he cried ecstatically. "Monsieur Guerchard," he said to the detective, "my daughter and I are going to the Ritz. I am going to entrust this tiara to you for safe keeping."

"I was going to suggest that I take care of it for you," Guerchard replied suavely, receiving the box into his hands.

"Come, Germaine, we must go," Gournay-Martin cried, tremendously relieved. "Jacques, will you go with us?"

"Yes, I'll come along," Charmerace said, taking up his coat and hat, but Guerchard interposed softly.

"I Had An Accident"

"Won't you stay, Your Grace? I think you might be interested, and we shall face Arsene Lupin together."

"Yes, yes, do, Jacques," Gournay-Martin said. "Two are better than one. We'll leave you here to help guard the tiara. Good-night."

"Good-night, Jacques," Germaine said, "but be careful. You know you were motoring all night and have had no sleep."

Guerchard seemed to find new interest in this disclosure as Gournay-Martin and Germaine left. He dropped into a chair and spent a moment in silent thought with his chin on his breast, his brows knit together.

"I didn't know that you had been motoring last night, Your Grace," he said.

"Yes, I was," the Duke answered.

"You were late in arriving here. What kind of a machine did you have?"

"A 100-horsepower."

"Something must have broken down, then."

"Yes, I had an accident on the road about 2 o'clock this morning."

"Ah! Did anyone else see the accident?"

Guerchard's tone was softly insinuating. Disregarding that, Charmerace replied:

"I said it was 2 o'clock in the morning."

"Oh, of course."

"Have a cigarette," the Duke said, after another few minutes of silence, lighting one for himself. "But I forgot. You only smoke Americans."

(To Be Continued To-morrow.)

A Rich Family's Quarrel.

"Think, love!" said Mrs. Gobsa Golde, "I ordered a dinner gown, and that tiresome dressmaker has sent me a traveling costume."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" Gobsa Golde demanded.

"The only thing is for us to go abroad again," she sighed.

They had quarrelled again.

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—in the homes, clubs, restaurants, hotels, cars and boats.

The Perfume of the Lady in Black

A Thrilling, Absorbing Story by the Author of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room"

By GASTON LEROUX.

Copyright, 1909, by Brentano's

Chapter XIII.—Continued.

BUT Darzac had seen the same thing, for he made a hasty step in that direction. But at that very moment the panel swung open before them. Pushed by an invisible hand it turned on its hinges. The Lady in Black tried to cry out, but her tongue clove to the roots of her mouth. But she made a gesture of terror and bewilderment which threw the wax candle to the ground at the very moment when a shadowy form issued from the panel. Uttering a cry of rage, Robert Darzac rushed upon the figure.

"And that shadow—that shadow had a face that you could see?" interrupted Rouletabille. "Mamma, why did you not see the face? You have killed the shadow, but how do we know that it was Larsan, if you did not see his face? Perhaps you have not even killed Larsan's shadow."

"Oh, yes," she replied, almost listlessly. "He is dead." And then for a moment she said no more.

And I looked at Rouletabille, asking myself: Who could have been killed if it were not Larsan? If Mathilde had not seen his face, she had certainly heard his voice. She shuddered yet at the recollection—she heard it yet. And Bernier, too, had heard the voice and recognized it—that terrible voice of Larsan's—the voice of Ballmeyer, who in that fearful conflict in the middle of the night had promised death to Robert Darzac.

"This blow will end your life!" while Darzac could only groan in the tones of a dying man. "Mathilde! Mathilde!" Ah, how he had cried to her!—how he had called with the rattle in his throat, as he lay already vanquished and in the shadow of death!

And she—she had only to throw her own shadow, swooning with terror, into the midst of those two other shadows, while the man she loved called upon her for the aid she could not give and which could not come from elsewhere. And then, suddenly, there had come the pistol shot and she had uttered that terrible shriek—as though she had been wounded, herself. "Who was dead? Who was living? Who was speaking? Whose voice would she hear?"

And then it was Robert who spoke.

Rouletabille took the Lady in Black into his arms once more, lifted her up and carried her tenderly to the door of her own room. And there, he said to her: "Mamma, you must leave me now. I have work to do—for you, M. Darzac and for myself."

"Don't leave me! I beg of you not to leave me until Robert comes back!" she cried in terror. Rouletabille begged her to try and take some rest and promised to remain near her if she would close her door, when someone knocked at the door of the corridor. Rouletabille asked who was there and the voice of Darzac answered.

"At last!" cried Rouletabille, and he threw the door open.

The man who entered looked like a corpse. Never was human face so pallid, so bloodless, so devoid of all semblance of life. So many emotions had ravaged his visage that it expressed not a single one.

"Ah! you were there!" he said. "Well, it is over."

And he fell into the chair from which Rouletabille had just raised the Lady in Black. He looked up at her.

"Your wish is realized," he said. "It is where you wished it to be."

"Did you see the face?" questioned Rouletabille excitedly.

"No," answered Darzac, wearily. "I have not seen it. Did you think that I was going to open the sack?"

I thought that Rouletabille would have shown discomfiture at this answer but, on the contrary, he turned to M. Darzac and said:

"Ah, you did not see his face. That's very good, indeed.' And he pressed his hand affectionately.

"The important thing now," he went on, "is not that, at all. It is necessary that we should close the circle. And you will help us do that, M. Darzac. Wait a moment."

And almost joyously, he threw himself down on all fours and crawled among the furniture and under the bed. And from time to time, he raised his head to say:

"Ah, I shall find something—something that will save us."

I answered, looking at M. Darzac: "Aren't we saved already?"

"Which will save our brains," Rouletabille went on.

"The boy is right!" exclaimed M. Darzac. "It is absolutely necessary for us to know how that man got into the room."

Suddenly Rouletabille rose to his feet, holding in his hand a revolver which he had found under the panel.

"Ah! you have found his revolver!" cried M. Darzac. "Fortunately, he did not have time to use it."

As he spoke M. Darzac took from his pocket his own revolver—the revolver which had save his life—and held it out to the young man.

"This is a good weapon!" he said.

And Rouletabille returned M. Darzac's revolver and put Larsan's in his pocket.

"Of what use is it to be armed now?" cried M. Darzac, shaking his head. "I assure you it is quite futile."

"You believe so?" demanded Rouletabille.

"I am certain of it."

Rouletabille made a few steps through the room and said:

"With Larsan, one can never be sure of anything. Where is the body?"

M. Darzac replied:

"Ask my wife. I want to forget all about it. I know nothing more about this horrible thing. When the remembrance of that dreadful journey shall return to me, I shall try to make myself believe that it was a nightmare. And I will drive it away. Never speak to me of it again. No one save Mme. Darzac knows where the body is. She may tell you, if she likes."

"I have forgotten, too!" said Mathilde. "I was obliged to do so."

"Nevertheless," insisted Rouletabille, shaking his head, "you must tell me. You said that he was in his agony. Are you sure that he is dead now?"

"I am perfectly sure," replied M. Darzac, simply.

"Oh, it is finished. Is it not entirely ended?" pleaded Mathilde. She arose and walked to the window. "See! there is the sun! This horrible night is dead—dead, forever! Everything is over!"

Rouletabille opened the door leading into the corridor and called Bernier and his wife.

They did not wish to enter, but he insisted on their doing so, and a general consultation took place from which we deduced the following facts:

(1) Rouletabille had visited the apartment at five o'clock and searched behind the panel and at that time there was no one in the room.

(2) After five o'clock the door of the apartment had been twice opened by Pere Bernier, who alone had the right to open it in the absence of M. and Mme. Darzac. The first time was at five o'clock to permit M. Darzac to enter: the next at eleven o'clock to admit M. and Mme. Darzac.

(3) Bernier had locked the door of the apartment when M. Darzac went out with us between a quarter past and half-past six.

(4) The door of the apartment had been locked and bolted by M. Darzac as soon as he entered his room, both in the afternoon and in the evening.

(5) Bernier had stood guard before the door of the apartment from five till eleven o'clock, with a brief interruption of not more than two minutes at six o'clock.

When we had discussed and fully established these facts, Rouletabille, who was sitting at M. Darzac's desk taking notes, arose and said:

"So far, it is very simple. We have only one hope. It is in the few moments that Bernier was off guard about six o'clock. At least, at that time, no one was behind it. It was you, M. Darzac. Can you reiterate, after having thoroughly searched your memory, that when you went into your room, you instantly closed the door and drew the bolt?"

"I can!" replied M. Darzac, solemnly; and he added: "I opened that door only when you and Sainclair knocked upon it. I swear it."

Rouletabille thanked the Berniers and dismissed them to get some rest. Then, his voice trembling, the lad said:

"It is well, M. Darzac, you have closed the circle. The apartment in the Square Tower is now closed as firmly as was the Yellow Room, which was like a strong box, or as the 'inexplicable gallery.'"

"One would guess immediately that Larsan was mixed up in the affair!" I exclaimed. "It is the same mode of procedure!"

"Yes," observed Mme. Darzac. "Yes, M. Sainclair, it is the same mode of procedure.' And she unfastened her husband's collar to show the wounds hidden beneath it.

"No, it is not the same thing," pronounced Rouletabille. "It is just the opposite. In the Yellow Room there was a body missing; in the room in the Round Tower, there is a body too many."

And he tottered out, leaning on my arm so as not to fall. The Lady in Black rushed toward him. He had strength enough left to stop her with a gesture.

"Oh—this is nothing!" he said. "I'm a little tired, that's all!"

(To be continued in Sunday's American.)

Sweethearts at Seventy-Five

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

UP in the mountains where I am staying there are two sweethearts who engage a great deal of my attention. It's my business to be interested in sweethearts, you know, and I don't often find any quite so interesting as these two, for the man is all of seventy-five and the woman is very nearly that age.

He is a straight-backed, white-haired, rugged old gentleman, who looks as though he might have been a sailor or a soldier in his youth.

And as for her—well, she is just the daintiest little Dresden china old lady you ever saw. Just the kind of a woman you know would hold the love and devotion of a man for over half a century.

She has snow-white curls and pink cheeks and a pair of dark eyes that must have led her sweetheart a fine dance in the days of their youth.

They walk together arm in arm every morning after breakfast—"We were always great walkers," she says with an air of pride—and though the walk is now the gentlest of promenades they start out as though they meant to walk miles.

Fifty-Seven Years Together

The man is just as much the woman's devoted lover as he was on the day he wooed and won her. For fifty-seven years they have led a life of perfect companionship and love.

When I told her that I was interested in all love affairs, and that I thought hers was one of the sweetest I had ever watched, she blushed like a girl.

"Ah, my dear," she said, in her sweet, quavering old voice, "you get to know a man pretty well after you have lived with him even a year, but you can go on learning things about him even at the end of fifty years. My married life has indeed been a blessed one, and I think the chief reason is that from the very first we agreed to be perfectly honest with each other, and to have respect for each other's opinions, likes and dislikes."

"Half the trouble with young married people," she went on to say, "is not only that they marry without being quite sure of the wisdom of their choice, but each expects too much of the other. They make no allowance for having been brought up in widely different surroundings.

"Tell your young friends that they must expect to make a few mistakes during th first year of their marriage and that the must be patient and forgiving. Tell th young wife not to be critical of her husband's old friends and never to make th mistake of being cool to the girls he pa attention to before he met her. Let he be satisfied with the fact that she is th one he loved best and asked to be hi wife.

"Tell her not to run to mother wit every complaint; it is not fair to her husband.

Give Him Liberty

"And tell the husband that he must remember that everything is new an strange to the young wife. She is just little bit frightened and lonely when sh thinks of all the responsibilities whic lie before her, with mother to turn t every minute for advice and comfort.

"I have been a wonderfully happ woman" she went on after a moment's pause, "but we had our ups and downs just at first. But we never sulked and w never slept on our grievances; we alway talked them out, and they usually turne out to be nothing at all when explained

"I have never tried to curtail my husband of his liberty. If he wanted to g to the club or out with the other me he was welcome. If he found other women attractive he was welcome to talk to them but"—with a smile—"I took very good care to make home so comfortable that he thought it the best place on earth and to make himself interesting enough to always be first in the field. It is best to let a man think he always leads," she added quietly, "and then you can very often have things your own way."

The Best Thing in Life

Just then her husband appeared with a soft white wrap. She looked up at him and smiled, and as he smiled back I could see that there was the perfect comradeship between them which required no words. There was the kind of love which makes the perfect tie between man and woman.

Perhaps you think that there is no romance in love at seventy-five, but when you strike that kind of romance you will find the best thing in life.

Business Men and the Income Tax

We shall hear much from now on about the proposed income tax amendment to the national constitution. The Legislature of Massachusetts will have the question before it this Winter. There may be some debate, some fiery protests by representatives of the big corporations. There may be no action taken this year or the next. There is no way to hasten action upon this question.

A few thoughts on the income tax question may not be out of place at this time. Look at the proposed tax for a moment from the standpoint of the average business man.

The income tax has been urged as a relief to men of small means and to the overburdened poor. But there is as much good to be said of it from the point of view of men of LARGE means engaged in great enterprises.

A properly graduated income tax, embracing all incomes above the living wage, is of all taxes the least burdensome to business men.

This is true, because there is no other kind of taxation that offers a man remission and relief in the times when his business is bad, and exacts its toll only in the GOOD times when one is ABLE to bear it.

It spares him in his adversity and asks only to participate in his prosperity.

Like the ancient tithes of Scripture and of the immemorial religious tradition, it lays its weighty burdens only upon years of plenty.

On the other hand, it is the vice of the more familiar methods of taxation that they grind their heels upon defeat.

A tax upon personal property levies its toll upon a stock of merchandise, whether it can be sold or not.

A land tax is charged in the rent of stores or factories, whether the business succeeds or fails.

A license tax must be paid BEFORE a trial can be made of one's undertaking.

A poll tax confounds the weak with the strong.

And an impost or excise raises the prices of commodities without respect of fortune.

It is only the income tax that will stand and wait upon the issues of enterprise, asking to be paid only when it is EASY to pay.

The industrial and mercantile classes of every degree will experience a marked relief when the income tax shall draw these privileged people into participation in the public burdens.

And, finally, business men will reap an immense advantage through the introduction of a system of taxation that will not disturb but will tend to establish and standardize the prices of commodities.

For a large proportion of business failures are due to incalculable fluctuations in prices caused by tariff-tinkering and the everchanging incidence of our complex schemes of indirect taxation.

A storm of objections has been raised against the taxation of incomes, but they are levelled not against the principle, but against the supposed difficulties of its application.

Thus it is said that the administration of the tax is difficult because it is too direct and downright in its operation or that it presupposes too much honesty in the people.

But no statesman, economist or journalist of reputation dares, or ever has dared, to risk that reputation in an assault upon the principle that men should share with the state the PROSPERITY of their business and should be RELIEVED from public burdens in the times of their private adversity.

Forcing Men to Drink Whiskey

That Is the RESULT of Prohibition With Its Unwise Effort at Temperance

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

The other day, for the fiftieth time, a judge handed down a decision that in localities ruled by prohibitionists the individual has a right to keep his own private locker in his club, billiard-room, or elsewhere.

This decision is, of course, based on the law as it stands. It is a decision due to the efforts of the prohibitionists, and it is a decision that PROMOTES DRUNKENNESS.

If you give a man the right to keep a locker in a club, HE KEEPS WHISKEY, OR SOME DRINK LIKE IT, IN THAT LOCKER. And when he drinks, he drinks whiskey, or some other poisonous drink.

You can't keep beer or light wines in a locker. Such temperate drinks must be kept in a cool place.

When you make drinking secret, when the judge says you must hide away your drink as you would hide away a vice, the really temperate drinks are driven out, AND WHISKEY IS MADE THE KING.

The prohibitionists—honest, well-meaning people—are THE BEST FRIENDS OF WHISKEY. They cannot drive out alcohol in all its forms. They cannot prevent men from drinking if they will, for the judges say that a man may have his locker.

But prohibitionists can, and they do, discourage and prevent the use of the really temperate drinks, AND IN THAT WAY THEY FORCE UPON MEN, AND INCREASE THE USE OF WHISKEY.

We received the other day a pathetic letter from a man describing his troubles and his downfall caused by whiskey. He lived and worked successfully in a community where prohibition did not rule. It was his habit to drink a small amount of beer daily. This agreed with him and did not harm him. Prohibitionists succeeded in stopping the sale of beer, and they succeeded in making this man try whiskey in place of beer, AND THEY MADE A DRUNKARD OUT OF HIM.

It is just as harmful, stupid and criminal for prohibitionists to drive out the use of beer and light wines, thus compelling the use of whiskey and other poisons, as it would be for some other collection of earnest, well-meaning fanatics to drive out the use of tobacco, AND COMPEL THE USE OF OPIUM.

You cannot compel men to change their habits. You can drive them into a worse habit by depriving them of one harmless, or relatively harmless. And that is just what the prohibitionist does in spite of all his good intentions.

ELBERT HUBBARD'S ARTICLE —ON— PROGRESS AND POVERTY

Especially Written for the American

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

"PROGRESS AND POVERTY," like every other great book for great man, was an accident. The book was ten years in the incubation.

It began with a newspaper editorial in 1869 and found form in a volume of 500 pages in 1879.

The editorial merely called attention to the fact that California, in spite of her vast wealth was peopled, for the most part, with people desperately poor; and that ground in the vicinity of any city, town or place of enterprise was held at so exorbitant a figure that the poor were actually enslaved by the men who owned the land. That is to say, the men who owned the land controlled the people who had to live on it, for man is a land animal, and cannot live apart from land any more than fishes can live at a distance from water. And, moreover, we tax for the improvements on land, thus really placing a pennance on enterprise.

The article attracted attention, and opened the eyes of one man at least—and that was the man who wrote it. He had written better than he knew, and any writer who does not occasionally surprise himself does not write well.

Henry George had surprised himself, and he wrote another editorial to explain the first. These editorials extended themselves into a series, and hand-polished and sandpapered, were reprinted in pamphlet form in 1871, under the title of "Our Land Policy."

The temerity which prompted the printing of this pamphlet was evolved through a letter from John Stuart Mill. Henry George knew he was right in his conclusions, but he felt that he needed the corroboration of a great mind that had grappled with abstruse problems, so he sent one of his editorials to Mill, the greatest living intellect of his time.

Mill showed his interest by replying in a long letter, wherein he addressed George as a man with a mind equal to his own, not a sophomore trying his wings. The letter from Mill was to him a white milepost. The corroboration gave him courage, confidence, poise.

The thousand copies of this pamphlet cost Henry George seventy-five dollars. The retail price was twenty-five cents each. Twenty-one copies were sold. The rest were given away to good people who promised to read them.

As the years passed, Henry George was gathering gear; he was getting an education. Providence was preparing him for his work. All he expressed by tongue or pen had land, labor, production and distribution in mind. He was getting acquainted with every phase of the subject—anticipating the objections, meeting the objectors, opening up side paths.

And so in 1878, when he sat down to write a magazine article on "Our Government Land Policy" the air was full of reasons. Soon the article stretched itself beyond magazine length, and in order to cover the theme he set down headings:

1. Wages.
2. Capital.
3. Division of Labor.
4. Population.
5. Subsistence.
6. Rent.
7. Interest.
8. The Remedy for Unequal Distribution.

He wrote all one night—wrote in a fever. The next day his pulse got back to normal, and on talking the matter over with his wife he decided to begin it all over and work his philosophy up into a book, writing as he could only one or two hours a day.

He was absolutely without capital, dependent on his income from space writing in the daily newspapers, but he began and the work grew.

It was all done on "stolen time," to use the phrase of Macaulay, and, therefore, vital, for things done because you have to do them—done to get rid of them—contain the red corpuscle.

On March 22, 1879, the precious bundle of manuscript was shipped to D. Appleton & Company, New York.

The publishers agreed that if the author would advance money for the electrotype plates they would undertake the publication.

But, alas! the author was in the proverbial author's condition. On the offer being laid before Henry George by mail he replied that he could make the electrotype plates himself. He was a type-setter, and had friends who would give him the use of their printing outfits. The offer was satisfactory to the Appletons.

Henry George received all the recognition that any thinker and writer could desire from August, 1880, to the day of his death, October 28, 1897. Men might not agree with him and his conclusions, but few indeed dare meet him in a duel of argument, either by pen or upon the public platform.

He spoke in churches, halls and private parlors. His newspaper and magazine articles commanded a price. He met the greatest minds of America and Europe on an equal footing.

In Europe his book was having a sale far beyond what it had met with at home.

And when he spoke in London and the chief cities of Great Britain the halls were packed to suffocation. He appealed to the Messianic instinct of the English workingmen, and they hailed him as the coming man—their deliverer.

Henry George was right in the class with Spencer, Huxley and Tyndall, none of whom, happily, was a college man, and, therefore, all were free from the handicap of dead learning and ossified opinion, and saw things as if they were new.

The mind of Henry George was a flower of slow growth. At thirty-seven he was just reaching mental manhood. According to all reasonable tables of expectancy he should have rivalled Humboldt and been at his prime at eighty. His brain was the brain of Ricardo, but instead of sticking to his books, he got caught in the swirl of politics, and was matched up with the cheap, the selfish, the grasping. The people who snatched Henry George out of his proper sphere as a thinker, writer and lecturer, and flung him into the turmoil of practical politics were of exactly the class who would, if they could, have a little later ridden him on a rail.

It was all a little like that speech of a man in Indianapolis who nominated James Whitcomb Riley for the presidency of the United States. The mob diluted the thought of Henry George and trod his proud and honest heart into the mire.

Had he been elected Mayor of New York, he could have done little or nothing for reform, for a Mayor has only the power delegated to him by the ward boss and the genus heeler. Beyond this he can merely apply the emergency brake by the use of the veto.

Henry George was a racehorse hitched by enthusiasts to an overloaded jaunting car with a drunken driver, bound for Donnybrook Fair.

And soon men said he was dead.

More Polar Paragraphs

By WEX JONES

COPENHAGEN—Scientific circles are greatly aroused over the report from Poodle Harbor that Commander Query says Eskimos cannot eat gumdrops without getting toothache. Explorer Snook characterizes this statement as a short and ugly slander, and declares that he will lay proofs before the scientists of the world.

To a large number of newspaper men Explorer Snook stated that the Eskimos did not chew the gumdrops, but merely let them melt in their mouths, a process which prevents wear of the molars and thus avoids toothache.

In addition Explorer Snook ridicules Commander Query's claim that he kept his Eskimos up to the mark on ice cream. He says the cold—295 degrees below zero, centigrade—would freeze the ice cream and render it useless for anything but building houses.

Poodle Harbor—The following dispatch has been received from Commander Query:

"Have nailed flag to Pole with glue. This is O. K. QUERY."

Dresden—Professor Hasenpfeffer, the famous astronomer, says that Snook must be a man of wonderful physical endurance to have remained on the Pole for two days, as he says he did. Professor Hasenpfeffer points out that the polar ice pack drifts eastward at the rate of nine miles an hour. Consequently to stay on the Pole a man would have to run westward at the same speed. To keep this up for two days would necessitate the endurance of a mustang.

Etah.—A report is current among the Eskimos to the effect that two American explorers met at the North Pole and shot each other. So far as the Eskimos understand the conversation one explorer accused the other of stealing his gumdrops, while the second discoverer asserted that his trained dogs had been used as frankfurters by the opposing party. The dispute culminated in the double shooting.

Vienna.—Professor Goulache, in a statement issued to-day, says that science has no use for the man walking behind a sled. What science wants is a trained observer who will get his toes frozen off to see if it hurts. Also an expert who can estimate the number of snowflakes required to make a glacier. The present trip to the Pole Professor Goulache calls "vaudeville science." He thinks the Pole should be brought down where it could be examined at leisure.

Kooklook (Special).—A message from Ootitoot, northern Greenland, says that Ektookhisbook, Dr. Snook's leading native assistant, has been kicked out of the Polar Union for walking twenty-three miles for a gumdrop.

Twenty miles is the recognised distance for one gumdrop.

Etah.—Commander Query, in reply to Dr. Snook's statement that the Pole looks like a twenty-five cent piece, says that he will make the doctor look like a 80-cent piece.

Etah.—Santa Claus, the well-known Eskimo, declares that no one has been at the Pole since he took up his residence there. He hopes that no explorers will come up there, as he doesn't want to lose any of his reindeer.

Copenhagen.—Instead of telling it to the marines, they now tell it to the King.

Honolulu.—A brass tube containing a flag has been found here. It is believed to be the one buried by Dr. Snook at the Pole.

Salt Lake City—A brass tube containing a flag has been found here. It is believed to be the one buried by Dr. Snook at the South Pole.

Melbourne, Vienna, Cairo, Delhi, Glasgow, Lyons, etc.—Ditto.
